That may be true, but at some point, it becomes cheaper to fight the charge than to continually pay fines as was the case with Stern.

> Recent examples are >Proctor & Gamble's decision to pull their commercials from "Queer Eye" >and "Will & Grace", and Bill Gates pulling his support of gay rights >legislation, all because of boycotts by some culturally intolerant >right-wing religious homophobes.

What you call a "right wing homophobe", others might call correcting blind acceptance of abhorrent behavior. You open that door, and it becomes only a matter of subjective degree as increasingly more decadent behavior is attempted to be justified by those who partake in it.

> The god-squads do not represent the >majority by any means, but they can put a dent in the profits of these

Most businesses don't care what they think. The most vocal of these activists do not represent significant buying power. And, as you pointed out so accurately, it's all about money.

> Money, not constitutionality,
>is the motivating factor behind the decisions of big business.

True in most cases.

>Back to the topic.... The FCC fines have increased over the years but >have never exceeded the cost of mounting a full-scale legal challenge;

I'm not so sure of that. But if it is true, that only serves to illustrate just how lawyers have corralled the legal field beyond the means of anyone who wishes to challenge perceived unfair practices.

>so the companies just take the hit, pay the fine and kiss FCC butt.
>I'm sure that someday the FCC will slap someone with an NAL based on a >faulty financial assessment of a company and get challenged, but I'm >also sure they have a contingency plan in case that ever happens.

Are you implying that the FCC only contemplates fining those who they feel cannot mount a successful legal challenge? I'm not sure I buy into this level of conspiratorial thought.

>After all, they have had plenty of time to plan strategies to defend >against any possible legal confrontation. But until that day comes, >the FCC will continue operating as a rouge government outside the >boundries of the Constitution.

The Constitution does not specifically define many agencies and policies in the federal government, such as the NSA, black ops, Area 51etc.. The Constitution could not possibly foresee the need for many of them, including the FCC. The creation of the FCC is perfectly legal, as it falls under the discretion of the congress, even if you may disagree with their tactics.

Yes, and we have great laws which protect us from unthinkable evils!!!
1) Can't spit on sidewalk...
2) Can't be naked in public...
3) Can't use profane language in public...
4) No urninating on public lands.. (but, sometimes I just can't hold it!)
5) No fishing without a licence...
6) No hunting without a licence...
7) No using the ham bands without a licence...

Now, the bleeding heart liberals are going to cry when we start executing people for violating these laws, but, YOU MUST HAVE ORDER!!!!

In the latest REAL disaster, the Tsunami, it was HAM radios, sent as emergency communications... the CB's had a very secondary part... now, if we could just teach CB'ers to speak english they might be of more value <grin>

Oh Gawd! Afraid of what? A demented loser who likes to pretend he is the AKC? And to beat all, Doug doesn't care if his children are cared for, but has a hardon for anyone who violates any CB rules and chases them to no end on the Internet, all the while ignoring court ordered specifics to obtain psychological treatment and find employment.

Not in my state. You aren't found guilty unless you admit to the already hashed this out with Leland a while back.

Actually, the common and statutory laws of England were adopted for the US, and the laws that were contrary to the Constitution were thrown out. You can't just make up laws on a whim -- they have to be founded on pre-existing law, be it statute, common or case law.

Call them 'summary offenses' or 'civil infractions', they are still violations of law and subject to due process under the Constitution.
You still have the right to appear in court, to contest the evidence, to appeal the ruling, etc, etc. And unless you can find a state that convicts upon being cited, you are still innocent until proven guilty.

It appears that they found it cheaper to eliminate Howard Stern than risk further fines. Indirect censorship at it's finest (and no, I don't like Howard Stern).

Oh man..... I could stand on this soap box for hours, but I won't.
I'll just give you one glaring example of what's -really- abhorrent: A TV censorship system where war and murder are suitable for all viewers but Janet Jackson's nipples are strictly off limits. And if you need more examples just ask, cause I have a long list of things "abhorrent" ranging from the Bush administration to dandelions.

But back to the topic, it's not up to you or any right-wing fanatic group to dictate how others should live their lives. If you are a Christian, great, but don't push your religion on me. You have your values, I have mine, and others have theirs. And if you can't accept the concept of "E Pluribus Unum" then leave.

Hogwash. I just gave you two recent examples of major corps bowing to pressure from these fanatics.

They don't represent a -significant- part of the economy but they -can- put a dent in the profits, which is what I already said. Corps make their decisions based on numbers, and if they think that dropping ads from a couple shows is going to be less expensive than a dent in profits from a small boycott then you can bet your bottom dollar that the ads will be yanked.

greedy bastards.

Cannot or will not.

Well, conspiracies do exist. And if my conclusions are true, the FCC wouldn't call it a conspiracy. In fact, I wouldn't either. I -would-call it a grossly unethical and unfair method of law enforcement. The FCC would probably call it "cost effective management" or some similar euphamism.

I never claimed the FCC was established illegally. My contention is that they are using procedures that are unconstitutional.

Being a ham who's used 2 meters ham simplex in a major disaster to find out which were the few gas stations in my county left with electricity to pump gas - and who used to diss CB - I now think CB is much more useful in emergencies. It doesn't depend on repeaters - and is sure to find SOMEONE local if you're driving on almost any major road in America. CB radio, when used properly be individuals with a modecum of professionalism can be a great addition to ones tools. unfortunately, with all the bucketmouths and alligator stations who don't give a sh*t about anyone but their own mouths, well..... you see the picture.

I Have seen the above with regular frequency during the summer monsoon down here. the people on the air here in phoenix don't care oif someone is hurt, in danger, etc. as far as they are concerned, its just a radio toy. so far,
no one has died as a result of this type of attitude, but that may happen.
can't wait to see the wrongful death lawsuit someone brings as a result.

meanwhile, the phoenix scene is much the same as ever. there are even some stupid people that are showing up on ham radio (case in point is an ongoing problem on 147.36 up state).

N8WWM threatens Dayton hamvention participants:

From N8WWM@arrl.net

Hey CUNT,
Wanna meet at Dayton or before? I will whip your gayboy ass like a red headed step-child. You are a punk-suck fagboy hiding behind an assumed name who dont have any balls. Come on, you lap likkin shit hunk...wanna party? I will kick your fukkin ass. You are a sissyboy faggot ILLEGAL KEYCLOWN.
Go hump your wife Dweebo faggot. You can only talk smoke...I can bring it into your life.
I think you have never opened a can of whip ass.
I volunteer to show ya how.
CUNT
Your turn, CUNT!

Hey Peepeeholic:
Yes I am in Toledo. I have plenty of down home hospitality for you or ANY of the other queens in here who wish to stir up some mess.
You wanna come by and visit? I will be delighted to send you back to the MISTAKE ON THE LAKE with a thought in your mind that it was a real dumb idea.
Imagine, Peepeeholic...Imagine...You come to my place and star some junk...I put you face down and hurtin extreme, take pics of you laying there with a bumped up noggin, and post 'em to the NG. I relish you coming by. I am good in the callbook, just as I told your wife, the trainedpuppet.
Have not had this much fun since I used to go cuttin' coax and building jamming oscillators back when I was 16 yrs old.

From N8WWM@arrl.net

Be forewarned: I like the kinda rumbles where there are cuts and broken bones. If you have never deliberately broken someones bones, or don't have the heart to cut, be civil. I have.

One of my friends that got me into ham has one. He let me borrow his FT-530 since he got the VX-5R. He loves it. I am nto not in love with it because it's too small. But he loves it.

Now, the guys who threw the ham test that I took, all said to stay away from Yaesu. They said they are all garbage, and only ex-CBers buy that brand. When I told that to other hams, they laughed. And since I threw myself in the fire and know little about each brand, I just keep asking. One thing though. Those boneheads that said Yaesu is for ex-CBers, are all affilitated with a local Kenwood dealer, so it might just be nothing more than advertising.

Well, I see the point you present, but I dispute and discard it.
We already have one location where radio can be used "properly", the amateur bands.
By the public simply "voting" with their use of radio, CB wins hands down!
Even if you were to force most of these people into the amateur bands (me included) and "proper use of the radio", they would simply stop using the radio and grab a cell phone.... I know amateurs see their use of the radio as "desirable", "proper" and "logical", ok, we can all get along here--go use it that way--simply stop trying to control others and let them have what makes 'em happy!!!
Personally, I like CB where I can "let my hair down", be anonymous and get in petty quibbles with the natives....

Get real! CB exists because there is a "real" demand for it!!!!

Warmest regards,
John

Yea it sure is a tiny rig, it would probably take some getting used to the multi-function buttons. I'll probably take it for $100 tho.

I don't know one brand from another when it comes to those things.

In real cases in a emergency CB will reach more people as Hams only talk to Hams, CBers will talk to any body and they do not waste time with the Ham BS, like in our area a person (the only one in his area) tried to report a bad storm possibly a tornado, but since he did not make it to their weather school, they would not listen.

Where will you be camping, mopathetic? We want to come introduce ourselves. Now, bear in mind we ARE heterosexual, but if you can handle meeting us without continued begging for our manly bodies we will stop by.

Basically, you are a coward who has proven her cowardice by not rising to a level playing field type challenge. You will never be allowed to forget it, either.

The "PileupBuster.com" domain name is For Sale or For Rent.

For less then the price of an HF rig you can own the ultimate Ham/CB Radio domain name.

The PileupBuster.com domain has immediate name recognition for everyone familiar with CB and Ham Radio. The sales and marketing benefits of owning this domain are obvious. This is probably the best Ham/CB Radio domain name available.

Click on the link below to see the traffic and more informormation about the domain.

So what other kind of treats does the Basset Hound like to eat when he's not humping your leg? With the right treats they would rather eat than bark. To bad you don't have any kids for the poor thing to play with.

hardeeharharharhar....!!!!! :))

January 6, 2003

Toledo Amateur Radio Club
7234 Latcha Road
Perrysburg, OH 43551
Attn: Trustee John C. Lagger, AA8XS

RE: Warning Notice--Amateur Repeater W8RZM

Dear Mr. Lagger:

Our records indicate that you are the trustee for the above repeater system. Enclosed are recordings of violations on the repeater by N8WWM. The transmissions continued for a considerable time and there was no evidence of a control operator.

Since you are the trustee for the repeater, it is important for you to understand that you are responsible for its proper operation. The decision to operate a repeater is a totally voluntarily one. Repeaters are a convenience in the Amateur Radio Service, not a necessity. A repeater is a station just like any other station; and under Section 97.205 of the Commission's rules, all stations must have a licensee and control operator. Under Sections 97.103(a) and 97.105, control operators must ensure the immediate proper operation of a station, regardless of the type of station control. Furthermore, "automatic" control does not mean "unattended" operation. Unattended operation is not authorized under the rules.

The repeater licensee/trustee is responsible for all recurring violations and violations that are not inadvertent, just as a licensee is responsible for a base station HF station operation in the licensee's home. You must prevent recurring and deliberate violations on the repeater by locking rule violators out, using tones, warning users, limiting its operation, or taking whatever steps necessary commensurate with your responsibility as the licensee of the station. If you are unable to do so, then you must shut down your station.

If you are unwilling or unable to prevent violations on the W8RZM repeater, then your operator and station license will be subject to enforcement action by the Commission. Such action may include monetary forfeiture, operator license suspension or station license revocation.

Nice Working Hallicrafters HT-18 Ham VFO Exciter

It has seven bands from 3.5 Mhz to 29.7 Mhz. It can also be crystal controlled and has sockets for three crystals. Included are a 3.729 Mhz and a 3.735 Mhz crystal. The output can be AM, CW or narrow band FM.

Because he can't ambush or sneak around like he so loves, that's why. mopathetic will always be reminded of his wrist flipping cowardice and his sexual urges toward ham radio operators.

mopathetic has so many awful perverse urges he is almost as bad as crackhead randy, who has publicly stated he would perform gay sexual acts for crack.

Chase that dog away, mopathetic...wash the sheets, air out the mattress, send your wife to reform school. Also, quit being a coward and cuddling with crackhead randy...and tell us where you are camping so we can introduce ourselves. Oops, I forgot...sissies like you won't confront anyone on equal terms.

There's more:

From N8WWM@arrl.net

You pissbag, I hope you go to Dayton. I will be wearing a sign with my call on it, front and back. Come up and introduce yourself and get a lunger hawked on your faggot ass, just like your wife pus bag twistie. I fukkin dare ya. Looks like I am gonna hafta start smokin cigars or something to generate enough flegm for all you mutant nuttsak slurpers.
By the way, have you stopped molesting hamsters yet?

Several years ago I observed a ham attempt to enter a CB radio report of a tornado touch down into a ham net. The hams would not accept the report, because it was not in proper "format," the observer had not been "trained," and the observer did not have a ham call sign. While the hams continued their petty nit picking, the tornado touched down. This is the mentality of ham radio today.

Nice try.

Hams only talk to Hams since no one else should be on an Amateur allocation. ANYone, whether they have an Amateur license or not, is a "CBer" if they are using a CB radio.

"Emergency communications" is NOT about how many people you can talk to...It's about conducting disaster-mitigating operations in an efficient and timely manner...whether that is on Amateur, commercial, military, etc. CB radio is NOT conducive to efficiency OR timeliness.

And ego's-be-danged...CB radio (11 meters, anyway...) is NOT the medium of choice of ANY disaster mitigation agency in the United States. Even REACT has abandoned 11 meters in favor of GMRS at 462/467MHZ FM.

There's also a very real demand for prophylactics, Game-boy's and Penthouse magazines...but they are of no use in emergency communications either!

CB radio serves a purpose. I have one and I use it on occassion.
But it has long ago passed any expectation of being a viable means of emergency communications. As I said...even REACT has abandoned it.

No, that may be the mentality of a particular ham or one group of hams, but it isn't every ham. There are idiots in any large group of people.

You say that you "observed a ham attempt to enter a CB radio report of a tornado touch down into a ham net."
Then you say "and the observer did not have a ham call sign."

A ham without a callsign?

2450. Good morning or good evening depending upon your location. I want to ask you the most important question of your life. Your joy or sorrow for all eternity depends upon your answer. This is the most important question of your life.

The question is: Are you saved?

It is not a question of how good you are,
nor if you are a church member, but are you saved?

Are you sure you will go to Heaven when you die?

The reason some people don't know for sure if they are going to Heaven when they die is because they just don't know.

The good news is that you can know for sure that you are going to Heaven.

The Holy Bible describes Heaven as a beautiful place with no death, sorrow, sickness or pain.

God tells us in the Holy Bible how simple it is to be saved so that we can live forever with Him
in Heaven.

"For if you confess with your mouth Jesus is Lord
and believe in your heart that God raised Him from the dead, you WILL BE SAVED." (Romans 10:9)

Over 2000 years ago God came from Heaven to earth
in the person of Jesus Christ to shed His blood
and die on a cross to pay our sin debt in full.

Jesus Christ was born in Israel supernaturally to
a virgin Jewish woman named Mary and lived a sinless
life for thirty-three years.

At the age of thirty-three Jesus was scourged and had a crown of thorns pressed onto His head then Jesus was crucified.

Three days after Jesus died on a cross and was placed in a grave Jesus rose from the dead as Jesus
said would happen before Jesus died.

If someone tells you that they are going to die and then three days later come back to life and it actually happens then this person must be the real deal.

Jesus Christ is the only person that ever lived a perfect sinless life.

This is why Jesus is able to cover our sins(misdeeds)
with His own blood because Jesus is sinless.

The Holy Bible says, "In Him(Jesus) we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of
sins..." (Ephesians 1:7)

If you would like God to forgive you of your past, present and future sins just ask Jesus Christ to be your Lord and Saviour.

It doesn't matter how old you are or how many bad things that you have done in your life including
lying and stealing all the way up to murder.

Just pray the prayer below with your mouth and mean
it from your heart and God will hear you and save you.

Dear Jesus Christ, I want to be saved so that I can have a home in Heaven with You when I die. I agree with You that I am a sinner. I believe that You love me and want to save me. I believe that You bled and died on the cross to pay the penalty for my sins and that You rose from the dead. Please forgive my sins
and come into my heart and be my Lord and Saviour.
Thanks Lord Jesus Christ for forgiving me and saving
me through Your merciful grace. Amen.

Welcome to the family of God if you just allowed God
to save you.

Now you are a real Christian and you can know for sure that you will live in Heaven forever when this life comes to an end.

As a child of God we are to avoid sin(wrongdoing),
but if you do sin the Holy Bible says, "My dear children, I write this to you so that you will not
sin. But if anybody does sin, we have one who speaks to the Father in our defense Jesus Christ,
the Righteous One."

Those of you that have not yet decided to place your trust in the Lord Jesus Christ may never get another chance to do so because you do not know when you will die.

Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth and the life:
no one can come to the Father(God)(in Heaven), but
by me." (John 14:6)

This means that if you die without trusting in Jesus Christ as your Lord and Saviour you will die in your sins and be forever separated from the love of God in a place called Hell.

The Holy Bible descibes Hell as a place of eternal torment, suffering, pain and agony for all those who have rejected Jesus Christ.

The good news is that you can avoid Hell by allowing Jesus Christ to save you today. Only then will you have true peace in your life knowing that no matter
what happens you are on your way to Heaven.

Praise the Lord!
Servant of the Lord Jesus Christ

yeah. that is most certainly true.
unfortunately, some of those "idiots" tend to end up in positions of power/responsibility and that's where their stupidity can endanger folks.

I also noticed you only moved one mile from your daddy. Afraid to stray too far from the nest.

I also found this sorta strange:

Your dad's (George Busch) address is 1385 DEVON CIR

Is that a typo or a neighbor?! Buschta?? lol

CB radio was -THE- method of emergency comm in the three natural disasters I have experienced. And in all three the hams couldn't quit posturing and bickering about procedure long enough to accomplish squat.

Doesn't look that way to me:

Despite your personal opinion, CB radio is -very- useful for emergency comm because a) there are so many of them; b) most of them are mobile;
c) most of them are off the grid; d) they are easy to use; e) there is a well-established organization in place to utilize the band.... there are several more reasons. But what has been proven time and time again is that when landlines fail in an emergency, CBers heed the call to duty just like every other citizen. After all, it's not called the Citizen's Band for nothing.

NO! Channel 9 was abandoned for the cell phone--but, I assume many cells will be down in an emergency--then you will see the object replaced the by the cell phone--re-emerge, and that is/was NOT ham radio, it WAS CB... Damn hams keep re-writing history!!!!

In the latest REAL disaster, the Tsunami, it was CB radios, sent as emergency communications... the hams had a very secondary part... now, with all those CB's sitting down there, skip from that area should vastly improve--BOTH on 11 and 10 meters <grin>

| c) most of them are off the grid; d) they are easy to use; e) there is
| a well-established organization in place to utilize the band.... there
| are several more reasons. But what has been proven time and time again
| is that when landlines fail in an emergency, CBers heed the call to

Good thing I don't have to retest. Dang! I wasn't aware that amateur radio was dependent upon repeaters. I can't remember what repeaters I've used to use on 160 meters (not to mention 75, 40, 20, or 15). I did use the 10 meter repeater from a 440 port a couple of times to chat with Australia, but that is, of course, not appropriate for an emergency.

Of course, if it actually is, you'll be happy to know we have a few repeaters that are not connected to the mains. Windmill and solar do work, but I wouldn't expect one of your obvious intellectual ability to understand those concepts.

LOL

If there has been a nuclear explosion close enough to where you are that generated an EMP that destroyed ss equipment, I doubt you are going to be worried about a few repeaters.

In excellent condition......no stratches, dings, wear, etc. I used it with the gold faced Kenwood R599D twins. The finish on this one is very,very good. Its 18K gold plated. Use it, or display it as a showpiece. Amplified base...works with virtually all ham gear. $150 shipped CONUS....or would consider a trade for an excellent MC-60A or an MC-85 to go with my TS-440SAT. Yeah, Tex

And when we had the big ice storm back in the early 90s, why was the police department in one area severely affected switched to an amateur repeater?

Ever been around after a big blow? Ever notice that it is the large trees, not the small ones, that get blown over?

Try a google search on "wind loading" and see if you can figure it out.

BTW, after that ice storm, power and telephone service was cut for hundreds of miles. They were asking for volunteer amateur hf operators. They needed reliable communications covering hundreds of miles.

I am aware that a number of cbers run excessive power. Should you run hundreds or thousands of watts, you will be heard for 100 miles or perhaps a bit more. 70 miles, for certain. Unfortunately, 90% of the folks that do hear you and answer you won't be able to hear. Unless, of course, they are also running far far in excess of the 12 watts pep ssb. This is not ground wave, nor is it space wave. It is scatter. Try a google search on that and see what you come up with.

The answer to continuous communications over hundreds of miles (continuous from zero miles to several hundred) depends upon being able to shift frequency. Not a few megahertz; rather a range approaching a 10 to 1 range (from 3.5 to 30 MHz).

Meanwhile, go do that search on "wind loading", keeping in mind about the small trees surviving winds that blow over large trees.

With luck, you may figure it out.

As to small "disasters", such as an auto accident, cell phones are far more likely to supply the information than cb or amateur radio.

With all due regards from Rochester, NY
Jim

You're going to get the Radio Shack brand right back again.

Radio Shack (U.S) will start opening its own stores in Canada under its own name imedialtey, now that they have back rights to the name.

An EMP blast is not designed to destroy buildings and life, simply to generate enormous amounts of rf... you will probably still be holding the radio which no longer works, wondering where you will get another....
And, "close" is VERY FAR.... those will be gigawatts of rf for a short duration--just long enough to fry the front end...

Don't worry dogie, you'll have ample opportunity to reap what you've sown. I only hope you show some spine this time, instead of cowering like the chickenshit demented freak that you are.

Hope you're bringing crisco K with you too, I have someone that wants

I guess it all depends on your perspective. You are given a ticket.
You can either accept it (Admit guilt) or fight it. If you fight it, your only chance is to hope that either the cop doesn't show up, or that the conditions were such that the judge might agree that you might not "deserve" the ticket. But it basically amounts to you
"fighting" for your innocence. The court tends to side with the police

Our whole system of government was modeled after the parliamentary system in England. It was, after all, the most prevalent model for the founding fathers at the time. They took the time to "correct" what they perceived were the flaws in the English system.

First off, WNBC thought it better to eliminate Stern. Then he moved to infinity and the rest was history. He was such a cash cow for them that the fines were justifiable compared to revenue realized. In fact the publicity surrounding the FCC and Stern actually increased interest (ratings) in his show.

Infinity did not "eliminate" Stern. Stern quit to move to Sirius Satellite radio where, he feels, his "creativity" would not be so constrained by the FCC rules of decency. The gamble he's making is whether the tongue dragging set that lives and dies by his every guffaw will shell out the money to listen to him on Sirius. Mel Karmazin, Viacom's COO who jumped ship to become the CEO of Sirius, seems to think so.

I'm waiting until the FCC gets into the Satellite radio scene.

Exactly! And that only underscores the point that with enough money you can hire enough defensive legal power to beat almost any criminal anything".

There have been cases over the years brought by people who tried to claim that the IRS and income tax itself was unconstitutional. There seems to be some credibility to the claim. But in every case, it gets shot down. I suspect that a similar claim against the FCC would be treated in a similar fashion.

I would be very interested in the hows and whys of this alleged unconstitutionality.

I suspect a great deal of subjectivity in this interpretation. Many people who claim to adhere to the strict wording of the constitution, would find many of our laws and governmental agencies to be "unconstitutional". The whole abortion law, as a result of Roe V.
Wade, is one such example, as it was established as a result of a judicial ruling rather than a legislative action.

Like the Bible, and religion in general, it's surprising at how many different interpretations you can find from a single source of information.

now who is complaining about rewriting history?

your assertion that ham played only a small "secondary part" in the tsunami distaster is simply put: false.

it was reporting in even a number of respectable sources throughout the region that ham radio allowed government ministry personally to keep in contact with the many islands that still had capability. mo where (I REPEAT
NO WHERE) was CB radio ever mentioned as a valid or utilized communications medium.

if you can prove otherwise, please show me the links.

who said that operations had to be limited to bands where there are repeaters?

I spent a lot of time listening across the HF bands during the tsunami distaster and I heard plenty of strong signals on the band passing health/welfare traffic from the western pacific rim. I don't think I ever even heard mention of repeater use at all in all of that traffic.

of course, you are right about 1 point: cell service was non-existant (save for those with sat phones).

same could be asked for most consumer grade electronics devices (including CB radios). Believe me, they haven't yet built a cb or a ham rig that can handle a close lightning strike (same effect as an emp blast at 70 miles up) unless you are talking about old tube gear.

anymore, most everything solid state is made to be as "cheap" as possible.
to harden against the effects of EMP and other "radiation" sources would make everything almost unaffordable (unless you are a government or military org).

One day The tower crew's radios were not working. I had a landline phone in the shack and it was imparative that I be able to talk to them so I sent them up with my cell phone. I was talking to the head guy when I heard this "click, click oh, fuuu... cassssshhhhh" My phone had just fallen 250' I slammed the battery on the back and powered it up. Yamaha PM1D for a bunch of shows, I was way over the Behringer league when in it full swing.

http://www.yamaha.ca/content/proaudio/products/mixers/PM1D/keyfeatures.jsp

Still quite heavy but really cuts down on gates and comps. The invonics were money channel comps, I still had to carry a rack for the analog shows.

For smaller scale I like the 02R, and the Innovason compact live. Mackie (arrgh) just introduced, well just started shipping, the TT24 which looks cool but there are only a handful out there now, I would like to use one sometime.

Problem is that your stuck with one brand of effects. I wish digital console manufacturers would get together and adopt a plug-in or memory card type standard for effect engines :) I'm a T.C. Electronic guy myself!

Since all my radios, save for one two meter rig, are tube type, then I

It all comes down to priorities. You don't NEED a new car, 2500sqft house, health club membership, Platinum MasterCard w/$10k balance....
If you pay cash for everything and save what you don't spend then a job loss or salary reduction isn't so devastating. Yes I know the "American way" is to spend more than you make and then, hopefully, be able to make the payments between spending sprees.

Nonsense. I have a 1300 Sq foot house, 1900 if you count the finished basement. I paid $225,000. I have a car I bought new for $17,500. I put $9,000 down. I have about $400 outstanding credit card bills. No kids. I do not have any re-occcuring bills like a health club. If I lose my job and make $10 per hour, I am losing everything listed above.

So what you are telling me, is that if your family took a 60% pay cut, you would be OK? I don't think so.

There is alot of people like me, whose only bills are a mortgage and a car payment, aside from the utilities/etc. If you cut their pay by 60%, their all in trouble.

BTW, I took precaution and have 1 year's worth of mortgage payments in the bank, in case this ever happens. So to answer your question, I would have 1 year before I would be in trouble.

Everyone should have a firewall. If you aren't set up as invisible, your machine will respond to pinging.

Your machine is vulnerable without a firewall, especially if you are on broadband. Regardless, even a dial-up should have a good firewall as well as an anti-virus program running at all times whilst on the Internet. It is also a good idea to have an anti-spyware program as well.

Do a google search and see what you turn up.

Better go back and re-read some of those press releases...Almost every one about GMRS.

UHF-CB, AKA GMRS, is the prefered method of operation for REACT teams.

And if CB is all-that for emergency communications, why is the federal goverment putting money into the ARRL and ARES and >>NOT<< REACT...???

There are a great many of them. Quantity does absolutely no good unless they are in the hands of trained operators.

b) most of them are mobile;

Can't argue that one.

> c) most of them are off the grid;

Waaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaay off the grid!

d) they are easy to use;

Obviously. IQ is not a dermining factor for turning one on.

e) there is a well-established organization in place to utilize the band....

There is an organization. They do use the band. But they conduct most of their operations on GMRS. They have even submitted a proposal to the FCC to allow greater flexibility in then use of GMRS by 501(c)(3) organizations.

Note no mention of using 11 meters for emergency or "homeland security" purposes.

There are a great many Patriotic, well-intentioned persons who own a CB and would gladly lend it's use to any meaningful emergency purpose, no doubt.

However the Citizen's Band Radio Service (11 meters) is nothing more than a footnote in disaster communications planning and practice. The unpredictable propagation, lack of trained persons and the overall lawlessness and shennanigans that goes on the service make it all but useless for practical use.

But when the Federal, State or local governments or the Armed Forces need a RELIABLE method of anciliary communicaitons they turn to ARES, RACES or MARS for those needs.

I am not arguing that the FCC should do ANYTHING!!! Well, other than assist the people in using "THEIR" radio spectrum... the radio spectrum is NOT theirs to do anything with!!!

A dialup is one of the biggest cases where you need a firewall.
Almost all dialups are directly to the internet. Your local PC IP

One would have to go down there and ask the "people in the streets."
As, I suspect their gov't would tell us quite another thing... same thing here, that is why this discussion is taking place in the first place--CB radio needs no "justification", it is much more active than amateur simply because it it more useful and the public has more of a demand for it... I suspect the gov't here does not find it that attractive--and neither do the hams... I suspect the gov't there (and hams) to be the same!!!

No. But, a huge number of those CB's in attics and basements will be drug out (they will work fine, they havent' been hooked to an antenna.)
Some truckers will be behind mountains, in tunnels, under underpasses, etc, etc...
The HUGE NUMBER of CB radios vs. the number of ham radios, by the law of probability and statistics, is what guarantees there will be GOBS of CB's around...
Think man!!! Think!!!

"People in the streets"? come off it. no reports of any kind relevant to cb radio use ever made it into ANY media reports from that part of the world. if CB were being used as part of disaster relief, there would be at least some mention of it.

at the time of the disaster, the government was concentrating on 1 thing: getting and dispensing information. cell phones and traditional infrastructure bound communications systems were out or severely overloaded. ham radio (and there are far more hams in that part of the world per percentage of population than here) basically saved their bacon.

lastly, your assertion that cb radio is more active than ham may or may not be entirely correct. here in the continental US, that may be true. in other places across the planet (where such "unlicensed" operations would be strictly controlled) this may not be the case. I am afraid you are going to have to prove this point with real facts and figures from credible sources before I can take it seriously.

btw, I happen to have come up from the land of the "great unwashed" cb'ers. I left a lot of the old bad habits behind when I took the test and got my ticket. to this day, I spend a potload more time listening than talking (it is amazing what one learns when one decides to engage the brain and close the mouth). what I find most pleasing about ham radio is the comradery and respect I get from fellow amateurs in the community. a lot of my friends moved up to ham after I did and we still yack on simplex. most of what I got from cb was "cuss this and threat that" and a lot of heat and discontent. mind you, there are some good folks there, but I heardly ever hear them on anymore.

I wasn't specifically referring to the news media (agreed that they don't always report whats relevent). However, given the great many sources of independant (and credible) information available, one would think that at least a handful of mentions might have made it out.

Well, ok, let's accept, for the moment, that CB is used by idiots and stupid people who cuss and make threats--that is still no reason they don't need a radio, if that's how they choose to express themselves--this is America--more power to 'em.

Now, if the FORCE others to listen, or to partake with them... or worse, to deny the hams use of their radios--THAT WOULD BE BAD!!!

Indeed, then they would be no better than the hams!!!

Warmest regards,
John

Transistor "gear" would survive, if NOT hooked to an antenna, especially, if "shielded" or in a metal enclosure--mobile home, metal cabinet, file cabinet, basement, etc, etc....

Fact is, there are MILLIONS of more CB's than ham radios... indeed, many of the late 60's-70's right up today are still used...

If you would even argue that the number of ham radios, in comparison to CB's--would make a pimple on the number of CB radios A$$--a three-day observation would be in order... there is one in every truck out there!!! (well, literally!)

Every listen on CB? Have you noticed all the Mexican stations and So. American stations there now? The numbers are GROWING!!!! In fact, take a spanish class... and, those stations are showing up on 10 meters too!!!

Then start counting the other ones....

Warmest regards,
John

One has only to attend any hamfest to see what buffoons hams are. Old unshaven obese men with five handi-talkies on their belt, their belt buckle hidden by rolls of fat and the filthy nacho cheese

radio used to be, giving newcomers at their club meeting the cold shoulder, then wondering why ham radio is becoming ever more insignificant, while CB radio grows bigger each year.

True that, the above part anyway. There's always the new crowd....you know the types....the one's you walked up behing in grade school carrying about 20 books....and that one in middle fell out! For them, ham radio has taken the place of women. The part below, doubtful.

No chance at all. Mopar was publicly invited by Dogie. -You- need to talk to a lawyer and have him properly explain what constitutes stalking, as you are misinformed. In the meantime, try not to think

I disagree. Emergency communications is deemed "whatever steps necessary to make contact", and if that means firing up a multi-kilowatt Davemade or some other big linear to make contact, so be it. In fact, in this scenario, the cb would be very conducive, efficient, and timely in multiple scenarios and examples.

REACT is alive and well in certain areas of the country and channel 9 in addition to 19 is still monitored. REACT did not abandon cb, they still use it in addition to cell phones, lap tops, pc's, what-have-you.

Thanks Twist. One only needs to read 4 or 5 of "John Smiths" posts to realize he is a kOOk. Anyone that has an inkling of taking me to court best have a strong enough case to pay for the counter suit, from a snake in the grass attorney. I hate lawyers enough to have a Good thing I don't have to retest. Dang! I wasn't aware that amateur radio was dependent upon repeaters. I can't remember what repeaters I've used to use on 160 meters (not to mention 75, 40, 20, or 15). I did use the 10 meter repeater from a 440 port a couple of times to chat with Australia, but that is, of course, not appropriate for an emergency.

Of course, if it actually is, you'll be happy to know we have a few repeaters that are not connected to the mains. Windmill and solar do work, but I wouldn't expect one of your obvious intellectual ability to understand those concepts.
LOL
Best regards from Rochester, NY

Being a ham who's used 2 meters ham simplex in a major disaster to find out which were the few gas stations in my county left with electricity to pump gas - and who used to diss CB - I now think CB is much more useful in emergencies. It doesn't depend on repeaters - and is sure to find SOMEONE local if you're driving on almost any major road in America. Ham may get you people on Pluto - but nobody near you - in much of the U.S. at many times of day.
You mean you didn't know life begins and ends on 2 meter for some of our resident nocodes? Oh sure,,,6 meter (rolls one good eye) ,,now that was the real joke on hammie radio funner arounders <g>,,,but hell, SOMETHING was needed in order to lend the impression of "technical" to such a class.

Yeah, Tex
And when we had the big ice storm back in the early 90s, why was the police department in one area severely affected switched to an amateur repeater?
Ever been around after a big blow? Ever notice that it is the large trees, not the small ones, that get blown over?
Try a google search on "wind loading" and see if you can figure it out.
BTW, after that ice storm, power and telephone service was cut for hundreds of miles. They were asking for volunteer amateur hf operators. They needed reliable communications covering hundreds of miles.
I am aware that a number of cbers run excessive power. Should you run hundreds or thousands of watts, you will be heard for 100 miles or perhaps a bit more. 70 miles, for certain. Unfortunately, 90% of the folks that do hear you and answer you won't be able to hear. Unless, of course, they are also running far far in excess of the 12 watts pep ssb.

Heya Jimbo!

During a critical emergency, it wouldn't matter if you could hear those who could hear you or not. Just keep repeating your SOS asking anyone within earshot to send help. Keep pluggin' away at it..help will come,,,,,the speed in which assistance arrives should be directily proportional to the amount of watts you are running <g>. I agree with the rest of your post.

Links? How about off the top of my head I give you the proper info and you do your own homework and if you fail to locate the educational

For starters, check the ACBRO TEAM INC in Australia. Or how about the

occur....help with the tsunami.
Just for kicks, a few other organizations that come to mind that not only depend upon cb but require it.. check the Disaster Management Plan belonging to the Coast Guard of India. This was put into law and devised right after the Barren volcano eruption in the early nineties. Of course, there are countless more, but this ought keep you occupied for the time being.

We all know that the 146MHz Band with no repeater needed goes father for the same amount of power, and audio is much better compared to CB . Also the talkies on this band has a good range for its antenna size, where as the CB talkies are useless. The FRS or any 460MHz equipment sucks for any range, some say good for 6 miles, yeh right, maybe in a line of site arrangement, in most cases .5 to one mile Max.

Jeez,

CBers vs. Hams

What's the point in debating which is better?

Both have positives and negatives.

CB - Positives: No license required, can remain anonymous, because of the national fraternity of truck drivers, it works better than a radar detector, you can find friendly people, you can buy a new transceiver for a dollar a channel. Negatives: limited range, can remain anonymous, you can always find a troublemaker, can't rely on it in an emergency, can't get away from a high noise floor.

Ham - Positives: can't remain anonymous which prevents a lot of riff-raft, frequencies all over the spectrum so you can plan for the distance you're looking for, as much power as you need (legally), can be reliable in emergencies if you know the right repeater frequencies, PL tones and access numbers or if you know some folks personally in the area who always monitor. Negatives: You can find malicious interferes on the ham bands also (more so now-a-days than a few years ago), no longer a fraternity of techies (which is the original reason I became a ham.) It would be hard for me to determine sometimes if I was listening to voices on 75 meters or 11 meters these days if I didn't look at the dial.

I do both. On the highways, I'm on channel 19 except in the big cities. Once you get in the big cities, the troublemakers make it impossible to use for more than a couple hundred yards. Then I slow down and switch to scanning 2 meters. I rely on my cell phone for emergencies these days--it's hard to find a place it doesn't work.

At home, I still like to work CW on HF. It still amazes me what you can do with a watt and a half on 20 or 15 meters. Sometimes I listen to channel 19 to hear what's going on and if someone asks for help, I give it to them. They are always gratefull.

When I first became a ham back in 1975, all my ham friends were experimenters. I can't describe the feeling I had the first contact I made with my homemade 6L6 CW transmitter and a kit Eico receiver. Hams like that don't exist anymore. The only thing to play around with now-a-days is antennas. And there's only so many antennas to play around with. Some work better than others depending on what you're trying to do.

I don't understand all these hard-line statements being made in this thread. If you like it, do it. If it pisses you off, don't do it. At least go get a ham license, that way you have a choice. It doesn't take much to get a ham license these days. And if passing that simple little test is too hard for you, there are enough corrupt VECs out there handing ham licenses out.

They both make good back-ups to the cell phone if your cell phone has no signal.

I'll choose to remain anonymous here.

Guy

Well, frankly, I don't know any CB'er which runs less than 100 watts, and most laugh at 100... I think 400-600 is more or less "standard."
And, some run "import linears" or even the russian multi-kilowatt rigs (just a few I know admit it, I suspect many more)... especially in remote locations away from cities...

Yeah, Tex
And when we had the big ice storm back in the early 90s, why was the police department in one area severely affected switched to an amateur repeater?
Ever been around after a big blow? Ever notice that it is the large trees, not the small ones, that get blown over?
Try a google search on "wind loading" and see if you can figure it out.
BTW, after that ice storm, power and telephone service was cut for hundreds of miles. They were asking for volunteer amateur hf operators. They needed reliable communications covering hundreds of miles.
I am aware that a number of cbers run excessive power. Should you run hundreds or thousands of watts, you will be heard for 100 miles or perhaps a bit more. 70 miles, for certain. Unfortunately, 90% of the folks that do hear you and answer you won't be able to hear. Unless, of course, they are also running far far in excess of the 12 watts pep ssb.

Heya Jimbo!

During a critical emergency, it wouldn't matter if you could hear those who could hear you or not. Just keep repeating your SOS asking anyone within earshot to send help. Keep pluggin' away at it..help will come,,,,,the speed in which assistance arrives should be directily proportional to the amount of watts you are running <g>. I agree with the rest of your post.

On 11 meters, with my 100 ft tower with a two element beam, I reach 50-75 air miles consistantly(at night when the chan is quiet)... but, I am on a valley floor... and that is 4.5 watts output... and you know I have NEVER ran more power than that!!!! (But, if I did, it would be a good sized chunk of this state, well, the valley walls would be a limit) And, of course, skip would be worldwide during the day...

On 10 meters, it is not that good (same tower, same ant), mainly because the hams don't have as good as antennas as the CB'ers (height wise.) And, there are just not as many hams here to chat with on 10 meters...

For point-to-point communications, HF is not nearly as reliable as sat-comm or MF/LF/VLF. Hams have satellites, 160m -and- HF, which is all well and fine. But the issue is that the bulk of radio comm is needed -within- the disaster area. Outside lines are pretty well covered because almost all of the emergency long-distance comm these days is done with portable sat-phones that are already in the hands of emergency organizations and government agencies. IOW, long distance emergency communication works just fine without hams. Although in my own experiences, hams -did- provide some public service by helping people contact distant family members, but that's about it.

Slightly OT, I should also mention that some of the HF ham traffic I heard during Mt. St. Helens and hurricane Gloria was absolutely disgraceful -- some sick bastards think it's cool to get a QSL card from a disaster zone. If hams want to criticize CBers for poor behavior they should at least hold themselves to a higher standard.

The same applies to antennas.

Not even close. Both FEMA and the military have their own, 100% self-contained communications networks complete with dedicated satellites; and the military has more backup systems than you can imagine. Most state and local governments have some sort of emergency management agency or plan that evolved out of the old civil defense networks initiated during the cold war. Usually it consists of the LERN network, the Emergency Alert System, "hardened" land lines, and the wide availability of satellite communications.

The fact is that long-distance radio communication has evolved well beyond the need to rely on hams during emergencies. You should have seen that coming when Sputnik was launched.

The court gives weight to the citation because it's basically an affidavit by the LEO who witnessed the infraction. IOW, the citation itself is evidence. If you contest the ticket then you must challenge that evidence (or the law). That's the way it works in criminal court, too.

Wrong. The burden is on the accuser to prove guilt. If there is no evidence to convict then the verdict must be not guilty. But the sworn affidavit of the LEO (the ticket itself) is strong evidence. So it is not the burden of the accused to prove his innocence but to discredit the evidence against him.

I'll worry about declining morality when the government declares that murder is a God-given right, or grants constitutional protection from discrimination for sex-offenders, or permits human sacrifice in the exercise of a religious ceremony. Because -that- would be abhorrent. What people do in the privacy of their own homes is none of your business. You may not like knowing that homosexuality exists, but the fact is that it does.

More than a hundred years ago it was "abhorrent" for a woman to expose her bare ankles in public. Is that immoral? Now take a little time to remember your history classes; it wasn't that long ago when cocaine and heroin were sold over the counter, children worked 16 hours/day in sweat shops for pennies, wife beating was not only tolerated but often encouraged, slavery was legal in half the country, and people were burned at the stake on the mere accusation of witchcraft (sounds a lot like some of our present-day "allies").

A mere half-century ago there were some people who didn't like the idea of treating black people as equals. They especially didn't want blacks to be able to vote. Some even used the argument that a black vote would diminish the value of their own vote, which was a weak rationalization of their racist attitudes.

You are no different than those racists, Dave. You don't like the idea that gays have just as much right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" as yourself, and you use the excuse that gay marriage will somehow diminish -your- values. And ironically, you are right because your values are founded on generations of discrimination and bigotry.

And in your ignorance, you think this country is in a state of moral decline because more and more people are recognizing the fact that homosexuality isn't evil. But you are wrong, Dave -- the state of public morality is actually improving -despite- your best efforts to prevent it. For example, in the past 20 years the public perception surrounding AIDS has changed from one of gay-bashing to one of acceptance. It changed because it was learned that the disease was -not- the product of rampant homosexuality as it was first assumed. Science therefore vindicated the gay community. But it also exposed people to their own misperceptions about homosexuality. Apparently you weren't paying attention.

So the problem you face is not one of moral decline. What you refuse to see is that the -church- is in a state of decline. More and more people are getting educated and learning that the world works according to the laws of science and logic, -not- according to the fatalistic and vengeful edicts of some big, scary 'god'. Religion is losing customers and you feel threatened. Well, kick back and pop a brew, Dave, because this is America, and you have the right to practice your religion as you see fit -- just let the rest of us do the same.

Maybe you skipped history class that day, but the Constitution was constructed to -prevent- minority rule.

As for television, the number of viewers determines the ratings of a show, so let the ratings determine what companies sponser what shows. That's how a free-market economy works. Or do you support the position of right-wing conservative Christians who say (by their actions) that any participation of fags in America's free-market economy should be supressed?

>> If you are a >>Christian, great, but don't push your religion on me.
>This has little to do with any specific religion.

Sure it does. You talk of morality but fail to understand that different religions impose different moralities. According to Christianity, I'm immoral because I commit blasphemy. Yet there is nothing in the Constitution that forbids atheism. On the contrary, it -protects- my beliefs, right or wrong. It also seperates religion from the government so my rights cannot be compromised by lawmakers who think that atheism should be illegal just because -they- think it is immoral.

>> You have your

The phrase "under God" was added in the 50's for whatever reason.
Considering that it was done at the height of the cold war and that the Soviet Union had outlawed religion, I think it was a good idea.
But guess what, Dave: the cold war is over.

And many people are on death row because of the same practices. But again you fail to address the fact that many times it's cheaper to settle or take the hit than to fight the charge in court, and the decision to fight is usually one based on money. -My- contention is that the FCC uses this fact to it's advantage when it decides who to fine and how much to fine them.

Once again you are confused, Dave. It was statutory law that initiated the Constitutional challenge. The statute was -overthrown- by the Supreme Court, not established. And case law is just as much 'law' as statutory law because of the system of 'checks and balances' -- to suggest that a law is something less because it is a "judicial ruling" is completely bogus.

It doesn't affect you one bit if two homosexuals get married. You can interpret it any way you want, but it's simply none of your business.
Just like it's none of your business if your neighbor gets his dick pierced, or your Aunt Bertha gets orgasms riding a Hog. If that's how they get their kicks then more power to them. Live and let live.

As for abortion, I'll wait until the discovery process is finished.

There is an increasing level of packet & spread spectrum activity by CB stations in the traditional freeband ranges, which indicates the ever growing ability of cb to provide reliable worldwide comms and experiment with nontraditional modes.
There are at least three international cb packet nets. Amazing what one observes, if you point your receiver outside the ham bands.

2566. RF interference in mobile CB from wheels of car?

Hi all, appreciate some help with this question. Recently installed a 477mhz (australian) CB radio in vehicle. Now getting interference on the CB radio which is related to how fast the wheels are spinning. I get no interfernece if the vehicle is not moving even if I rev up the engine (i.e. the problem is not alternator or ignition system related). I also get the interference when I use a handheld CB which does not have power or antenna connected to the car.

Therefore, the interference is not coming through a power or antenna cable and the usual suggestions of "use a noise filter" will not apply in this case.

Some people I have been speaking to have suggested that the problem could be either:

1. Speedometer drive circuitry - It is possible that the speedo sensor is acting as a transmitter, even with the ignition off, as it is electro-mechanical, and may generate pulses even if there is nothing turned on to read them.

2. ABS sensor - sends data to computer about wheel movement - could be causing interference

3. Magetic wheels / tyres - could be creating interference.

Can anyone tell me:

1. could the speedo / ABS units be causing the interference?

2 if so, where are the speedo / ABS units located and how can I stop this problem? I.e. can they be shielded using copper cable or can I noise filter be applied to them.

thanks in advance

Even when I tuned around between 27.5 and 28 during the last peak (we're in the trough of the 11 sunspot cycle right now), I don't understand why those people don't just break down and get a ham license.

It's hard to exchange QSL cards when you're trying to remain anonymous.

Is it the excitement of doing something illegal and not getting caught? Is that the adreniline rush? Is that why they do it?

your antenna is a toy compared to most ham antennas. if you have trouble chatting with somone on 10 meters, maybe you should learn to speak english. most freebanders are quite illiterate.

they are too ignorant to get a license, and they enjoy pissing and

But in criminal court the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt in order to gain a guilty verdict. You are presumed innocent until then. Traffic court is not quite the same. While they may not specifically say it this way, the fact that you got a ticket, is evidence of guilt, and you have to try your best to prove that you're not guilty. The word of one cop is enough, in most cases, to render a "guilty" verdict, unless you're damn lucky and can somehow "prove"
your innocence.

In most cases, it is not concrete evidence. It's no better than "he said-she said" testimony.

> So it is >not the burden of the accused to prove his innocence but to discredit

Why play word games? The end result is the same. The accuser has to prove his innocence, by discrediting the evidence against him. The cop is not required to demonstrate 6 different ways from Sunday how the accuser is guilty "beyond a reasonable doubt". He only has to show up and testify that the accuser ran such and such red light, and it's his word against the accuser's. So who does the court tend to believe? How is this a "presumption of innocence"?

The difference between you and I is only a matter of degree. When you make relative value judgements, this is the danger you run into. When you apply logic in the justification for allowing certain behaviors, the same logic can be applied to a successive list of increasingly abhorrent behaviors and practices. It comes down to what you are willing to tolerate. Once you start down that slippery slope, there's no turning back, without abandoning your logic and adopting some sort of "bigotry".

>Because -that- would be abhorrent.
>What people do in the privacy of their own homes is none of your

The fact that someone hides behind the walls of their house is irrelevant. Murder is still murder, if it is done on a public street or in the bedroom. The same principle applies for other behaviors.

And judging by the increasingly immoral tendencies in the mainstream, it won't be long before women are parading around bare chested. Yet we "enlightenment."

Homosexuality is a disorder of the brain. Not much different than schizophrenia, bipolar, or a host of other disorders. We should be looking for ways to treat and correct it, not for reasons to excuse
it.

A marriage is a symbolic ritual of bonding that occurs between biologically compatible couples. There can be no natural procreation in a homosexual union. So yes, those values ARE diminished.

The number one group most responsible of the proliferation of AIDS is still, to this day, homosexual males having unprotected sex .

http://www.cdc.gov/hiv/stats/hasr1102.pdf

If you lead a monogamous lifestyle and do not engage in dangerous recreational habits, your chances of contracting AIDS is minuscule.

>Science therefore vindicated the gay community. But it also exposed

I was paying attention. To the facts.

There are many who believe that AIDS is the work of God, sent to punish those who engage in "unworthy" behavior. It's easy for those who have little faith in a supreme being to deny this possibility. But it's interesting in where the highest percentages of HIV cases are,
and what activities place people at the most risk. Coincidence?

You call that "education"? I call that institutionalized ignorance.
Science and logic are not necessarily diametrically opposed to the concepts of intelligent design. In fact they work hand in hand.

> Religion is losing customers and you feel threatened.

Actually no. The more the world plunges into civil unrest, school shootings, terrorism, general decay in decency and morality, the more religion is making a comeback. In the period following 9/11, there was a sharp increase in religious belief and interest in spirituality.

Quite contrary. Logic supports the existence of a creator or, more generally, the concept of intelligent design. Our whole ecosystem, the intricate specialization of the various functions of our bodies and other aspects of nature are far too complex to have occurred and evolved at random. There is simply not enough order in chaos for this to happen.

Not when abhorrent behavior is cancerous to their way of life. They have a right to fight for what they believe in, just as much as those who would throw traditional morality to the wind in support of the latest hedonistic pop-culture fad.

Unfortunately true. But neither case should be acceptable. Justice

the best show for the jury.

I agree. But in many cases the decision to fight also hinges on the chances of winning. If the truth is on your side, then you should fight. If your case is weak, then perhaps not.

I'd be more inclined to believe your allegation of institutionalized discrimination, if there were specific examples that highlight this pattern.

In the personal radio arena, the FCC often takes into consideration the ability of the defendant to pay the fine. In many cases, the fines were lowered if the defendant can prove hardship.

Exactly. But what right should a branch of government which is standing law? That is the job for the legislature.

I call it "overstepping their bounds". No law that is made by the legislature should be struck down by a panel of judges without debate, which should include the legislature who passed the law in the first place.

Some people get their kicks by having sex with small children. Should we allow them to just live and let live? If not, then why not? Then explain how this logic differs from any other justification for other immoral behavior. Then we're back to the slippery slope.

In Florida, if one has a clean license (no tickets on record) and is issued a simple traffic ticket, such as for exceeding the speed limit (but less than 15 mph over the legal limit, as speeding more than 15 mph over the limit requires a mandatory court appearance) and challenges it

There is an increasing level of packet & spread spectrum activity by CB stations in the traditional freeband ranges, which indicates the ever growing ability of cb to provide reliable worldwide comms and experiment with nontraditional modes. There are at least three international cb packet nets. Amazing what one observes, if you point your receiver outside the ham bands.

Um Dave, when the officer hands the book to you and says "sign here" he always says: " This is not an admission of guilt, but a promissory to appear in court", so how does your statement apply? It doesn't.
If you didn't do anything wrong, you have the RIGHT to appear in court, present your evidence to the JUDGE and let him make the decision, not a bunch of people sitting around a table, drinking coffee, eating donuts and then saying....."um, this guy said SH*T, let's fine him.....$25,000.00, yeah, that's a good amount"
You have a better chance of beating a ticket if your inocent than an FCC fine, at least you appear before a Judge and you can request a jury trial, try to do that with a FCC NAL.

What word games? The officer presents his evidence, then you have your turn, do you think that just because he's a police officer he's always right?
If you present the correct type of evidence, witness's, you will be found innocent.

No chance at all. Mopar was publicly invited by Dogie. -You- need to talk to a lawyer and have him properly explain what constitutes

The rest of your post assumes the above to be true. You have discounted the possibility the identity of one who made such a physical threat was found immediately after the post and logged with the isp's he utilized, due to them being contacted and instructed future legal ramifications may arise referring this specific user due his violation of the law.
But I'll play devil's advocate for you.

Good point. I taught N3CVJ this a few posts ago when he said saying

In a nut shell,,,consider he initiated physical threats, is a felon, indigent, not of sound mind (as per the courts), and designated (by the FCC) repeater jammer, how many lawyers you think will represent this individual in a civil case, pro bono? Otoh, one can not initiate any court actions on their own behalf if they are not of sound mind. One is appointed on their behalf to represent their best interests.

Other interesting findings made by The National Communications System (NCS), a governmental entity made up from 22 different Federal agenciesengineers were that portable generators, such as Honda types, were not likely to be adversely effected by EMP at all. Neither were hand-held walkie-talkie type portable radios, particularly those with short stubby "rubber duck" antennas.

looks like hams with HT's is the best thing to have during an EMP blast.

yeah, and a lot of them get junked after a while. part are becomming difficult to get, especially for the older rigs. cb repair shops aren't nearly as plentiful as they once were (only 6 left in phoenix when there used to be over 30 during the great CB heyday)

no. there isn't.... in point of fact, in just about every truck anymore, there is a mix of gear. some trucking companies no longer allow drivers to install "personal equipment". I know this because I have a family member thats a road super for swift trucking (ogden utah division) and the company policy is this: "no user install equipment allowed. anyone caught will be terminated". just for your info: swift is not a small, third rate trucking company. they happen to be one of the "big 10" of the western states.

I usually hear them from mexico. of late, the number of actual users on the band has diminished since 10 years ago. I can actually find quiet frequencies in that spectrum that might not have people on them for hours.

gee, nearly continuous traffic levels on the amateur bands (when conditions are in for each band). sometimes, the noise rivals that of even channle 19 well, considering I am from the "diaper band" originally, I often look at folks who "fuss and cuss" with some disdain (couldn't they be just a tad smarter?). I'm finding, more and more, that the smarter ones are moving to MURS or FRS for their local chats. less of a problem on those bands.

Besides he needs to read it again, he is using a beam, that is worthless for local emergency communications, the point is that in a local disaster use the two meter band works out allllllooottt better than CB.

its now "put up or shut up" time. provide the proof and I'll shut up.
continue to argue and I will be as stubborn to my point of view as possible. the fastest way to disarm an arguement is with a few well placed facts. so far, I haven't seen any.

> For starters, check the ACBRO TEAM INC in Australia. Or how about the > Lions Club in the UK with their praise for cb over what you say didn't pardon? ACVRO Team has NOTHING on their site relevant to the tsunami. even did a google search with those terms and the acbro site came up WITHOUT any mention of Tsunami communications relief. NEXT!

 from the Lions club UK site:
"Two Indonesian radio amateurs, Soejat Harto, YB6HB, & Zulkarman Syafrin, YC6PLG, are among the team of volunteers who have gone to Nias Island following the latest earthquake on 28 March. The quake measured 8.7 on the Richter scale and around 1000 lives may have been lost. Soejat is a medical doctor and a vice-chairman of the North Sumatra Province branch of ORARI, the Indonesian national amateur radio society, while Zulkarman is a member of the Indonesian Amateur Radio Emergency Service.

Amateur radio is not C.B., worthy though Citizens Band Radio is. Amateur Radio is a unique & fascinating hobby that captivates millions of people world wide. It encompasses a huge range of activities, from people communicating locally in the same town or city, to people communicating with others right around the world, or beyond by talking with other licensed amateur radio operators in the international space station."
not the phrase "Amateur radio is not C.B.". where in there (or anywhere else on their site does it mention Cb as being used prominently in the tsunami distaster? IT DOESN'T!. nice try. you lose.

try again. cb radio was not mentioned anywhere on their pages as a primary communications system, and only its mention as a system having been phased out last decade.

you really need to try harder.

What a myth! Amazing how the untrained "think" they can't be caught simply because they are mobile. There's quite a few truckers that thought that when they got caught for playing

It sure doesn't fit in the emergency plans of NORAD and Homeland Security. I would be curious as to just which national emergency plans (US Government) include any cb spread spectrum.

I do not have statistics on this, but from my (again nameless) police friends, I am told that most times the tickets stand, as long as the cop appears, and the offense is not easily disputable. That's why, in Pa, they normally give you 5 - 10 MPH over the speed limit, so as to eliminate the dispute over accuracies. In many cases the cop does not appear, and you can consider that a "gimme". But there's no way to predict who will show and in which case.

Not sure about A3E & J3E modes, but at least two advanced CB modes do figure in to national plans. They are CB spread-spectrum and packet.

In Pa, you sign to acknowledge receipt of the citation. You then have the choice to either plead guilty and remit the amount of the fine to the address included. Or, you can plead "not guilty" and take your chances fighting in court. But unless you have some means of actually proving your innocence beyond that of playing he said- he said with a cop, you pretty much have the cards stacked against you. Oh, and you will be assessed court costs in addition to your fine if found guilty.

>If you didn't do anything wrong, you have the RIGHT to appear in

>let's fine him.....$25,000.00, yeah, that's a good amount"

Whether or not you did something wrong or not may be open to subjective interpretation. Most cops would not bother to write someone a ticket for not coming completely to a stop and waiting the required 3 seconds before proceeding at a stop sign. But the point between what's an acceptable stop and one that's not, is a subjective gray area, and not one that you will usually win. Most traffic law issues are not always black and white. Yes, if you actually feel that you were unfairly targeted, you might be tempted to fight. But if you are still guilty of violating the letter of the law, if not the intent, you might find it a tough battle.

On the other hand, if you piss off a cop and he pulls you over and "invents" a few charges to stick you with, you will still have a hard time proving that you did not commit them unless, of course, the cop in question has a history of abusing his power in such a way.

Is this fair? No. But is it a fact of life? Certainly.

> You have a better chance of beating a ticket if your inocent than

You can fight an NAL as well. In most cases the FCC gives fair warning before handing out the NAL. If you heed the warning, in most cases that will be the end of it. I haven't read any accounts of people popped by the FCC who weren't guilty of the offense charged. In most cases, their "defense" consists of crying poor, or somehow trying to justify their actions. Some of the excuses given are quite laughable.

No, he's not always right, but he's more credible in the eyes of the court than Joe Average Citizen. Cops are viewed with a certain amount of public trust. If it comes down to a battle of testimony between you and the cop, the court will side with the cop in most cases.

Tell me, just how great are your chances of having an impartial witness around when you need them, or having some other form of concrete exculpatory evidence?

You are talking how things should be in theory. I'm talking about how they are in reality. In an ideal world, all innocent people would never be accused or wrongly convicted of a crime. The real world paints an entirely different picture. I'm not saying it's right. I'm just acknowledging that it happens.

It's an unfortunate truth that there are some people out there that can't exercise self control and, by their lack of respect for others, pollute the public venues with inappropriate behavior. Barring vigilante justice, government intervention is often the only sensible alternative.

Ironically, I tend to be a "minimal governmental intrusion" advocate. But as more and more people adopt an "in your face" attitude with respect to their perceived rights, I start to understand the need for stricter controls.

11 meter cb fits no where in any national plans.

I just tuned around the FREEBAND and didn't hear anything. I would say it's just about useless at this time.

Now... if I go down to 14 Mhz or up to 144 Mhz I hear a bunch of stuff.

CB fits into national disaster plans simply because "we all" have them!!!
We will use them, we will use them to help others, we will be out in our mobiles, we will be in neighbor hoods, we will be highly accessable to the general public, and right next to people who need help, etc, etc....
The people in need will NOT be hunting up a ham to help them!!!!

Think MAN!!! Think!

No. I don't see CB helping NORAD, the gov't, the FCC, George Bush or my

I see it helping myself, my neighbor and other fellow citizens....

Yes, but loosing 80% of the millions of CB radios, and loosing 80% of the thousands of ham radios are two VERY different things!!!!

well at least that way, you will all the smokey reports and know where all the hookers all.

however, I hope the damn cb'ers will finally crawl down off their high horse and take my traffic reports when they see all those needing REAL help!!!!
they just might not.... and here lies the real problem!

They won't have to "hunt up" anyone, assuming this is anything other than a direct nuclear hit where there's NOone to "hunt up"
anyway.

Those who are parts of various volunteer teams, whether it's ARES, REACT, Red Cross, Civil Air Patrol, etc etc etc, will know where to go and what to do if the need arises. They won't need an "invitation" to show up and they'll already know what to do.

And the only good an 11 meter CB radio will do is get "smokey" reports along the way to their staging point.

funny the california office of emergency services recognizes RACES but not cb or freeband. why is that? cb'ers and freebanders show no self control or discipline. during a emergency there will be hundreds of the dummies all trying to talk over the top of each other.

breaker how bout a radio check,just want to see if this things gettin out.

Again, it all comes down to priorities. Do you NEED that $225k house? If necessary you COULD live in an apartment. I'm not saying that you should sell your house and move so let's not go there. Did you NEED that new car or was it just nice to have? You could have bought very good a used car for $9000 of that and had NO car payment. Do you mean $400 balance in credit cards or $400/month payments? $400/month payments means you have quite a balance and are spending more than you make.

I have a wife and five kids, no house payment (house is paid-for), no car payments (paid cash), no CC balances, they get paid in full every month. So yes if I took a "60% pay cut" we would survive. We could do without cell phones, high speed internet, satellite TV, eating out, trips to the beach, etc. We would have enough for food, electricity, etc.

Then they aren't saving enough for that "rainy day." If you are "living from paycheck to paycheck" then you need to cut back no matter how big your paycheck is.

You are very wise! Many would be in trouble by the time the next paycheck is scheduled to arrive!

During the floods here on the Red and Minnesota rivers a few years ago when Grand Forks burned, the 11M guys patrolled the dikes and reported problems just as effectively as the hams did. Reality trumps myth every time.

For starters, check the ACBRO TEAM INC in Australia. Or how about the Lions Club in the UK with their praise for cb over what you say didn't occur....help with the tsunami.

>pardon? ACVRO Team has NOTHING on

Who said anything about their site? I didn't even know they had one....the club is on one of the cards I received with a newsletter detailing their activities. I talk with Australia on a regular basis and several of my contacts are in the cue. Email the club (I'm assuming their webpage lists a contact addy) and ask them. Of course, I can always scan my newsletter this weekend and send it to you Monday or Tuesday, depending on the weather.

The Lions club assists with disasters all over, not just in Indonesia. Again, there were several members giving aid to the tsunami ravaged area and cb was used for many of their communications. Again, you have only to email the Lions Club (of the UK) and ask them what extent cb plays in their fantastic efforts.

Talking with the astronauts in the space station is looked upon by many as is HF skip by others,,,,,,..not a big deal. I prefer to watch it go up instead of talking to it, especially the night launches. In fact, we (those in Fl. fortunate enough to be outdoors a few nights ago at the precise time) were just treated to one of the most incredible Cape Canaveral spectacles in years. The secret Titan rocket went up unannounced, and in addition to looking like a normal shuttle launch in the night sky (fantabulous) "broke" with a bright flash into two smaller pieces which did NOT fall, but seemed to remain in orbit, with their own red lights. Less than three minutes later, an incredible flash lit up the ebony heavens and another separation of two objects that also remained, also with red lights. The "main" body of the rocket continued skyward. Check out one of the launches and leave the damn communicating to the astronauts to who should be communicating with them,,,,,the kids in the classrooms.

Well, that's what you get for placing all your eggs in one basket and assuming the web is the final be-all of the last word. Take this as a learning experience.

Just for kicks, a few other organizations that come to mind that not only depend upon cb but require it.. check the Disaster Management Plan belonging to the Coast Guard of India. This was put into law and devised right after the Barren volcano eruption in the early nineties. Of course, there are countless more, but this ought keep you occupied for the time being.

>try again. cb radio was not mentioned

Again, I didn't read their site, but remember it (cb) is official via their disaster management plan in times of critical emergency disasters.
Read the plan as administered by the head of their guard, not just a website telling you ABOUT the guard. There are way more cb's in many foreign countries than amateur radios.

Being a ham who's used 2 meters ham simplex in a major disaster to find out which were the few gas stations in my county left with electricity to pump gas - and who used to diss CB - I now think CB is much more useful in emergencies. It doesn't depend on repeaters - and is sure to find SOMEONE local if you're driving on almost any major road in America. Ham may get you people on Pluto - but nobody near you - in much of the U.S. at many times of day.

None of them got caught. They received letters from the FCC very clearly stating "information received by the FCC INDICATES.....". Nowhere did it say they WERE operating illegally, only that the information supplied them indicated such. Ever since the FCC changed the manner in which you supply them info, you have upset yourself. LMAO! Go stand in the corner

The freeband encompasses many freqs. There is ALWAYS activity going on somewhere there. Freqs used to be posted in here, but then we caused a stroke or two among some nocodes by daring to speak of freebanding among these pages when they insisted otherwise, they retaliated by trashing their reputation among these pages and on those freqs. For the sake of keeping out the degenerates, those freqs are no longer posted.

He didn't catch any. He padrooled the interstate and wrote down truckers numbers and told the FCC he witnessed their violations. The FCC sends the truckers a letter claiming the information they received "indicates" a violation has taken place and warn them not to do it again. As you probably already guessed by now, the majority of these warnings go straight to the trash and the truckers become educated in the way of radio law and learn the FCC must witness a violation for any real action to be taken. Ironically, this often results in the very opposite of what JO K4KWH is trying to achieve, as once the truckers learn there is NO cb enforcement on TOP of their newly learned education that the feds can't touch them through such tactics,
well,,,,you figure it out. :)

Some of the problem is not really ham related. It is due to the fact that the various emergency services will NOT accept an unconfirmed report from an untrained individual whether or not they are a ham or anyone else.

For example, if Joe Blow Citizen calls in a tornado on a land line, the report will be considered only a possible tornado not a confirmed tornado unless he is a trained storm spotter.

Last time I looked, the FCC regulations don't allow CB antennas to exceed 20 feet in height.

He didn't catch any. He padrooled the interstate and wrote down truckers numbers and told the FCC he witnessed their violations. The FCC sends the truckers a letter claiming the information
they received "indicates" a violation has taken place and warn them not to do it again. As you probably already guessed by now, the majority of these warnings go straight to the trash and the truckers become educated in the way of radio law and learn the FCC must witness a violation for any real action to be taken. Ironically, this often results in the very opposite of what JO K4KWH is trying to achieve, as once the truckers
learn there is NO cb enforcement on TOP of their newly learned education that the feds can't touch them through such tactics,
well,,,,you figure it out. :)

Moreover, many truckers now install marine radio equipment in their trucks, or otoh, they open their hf xcvrs and communicate most anywhere in the hf spectrum. I have heard long haul truckers in the 6, 7, 8, 10, & 14 mHz bands. Tune between 5500 kHz to 7000 at night, and you can pick up a few long haul trucker nets.
They chatter all night while driving.

Hi Steve,

ONE community?

A VERY SMALL group?

Check a map, Twenty-one counties in Minnesota and eleven counties in North Dakota were in the flood zone of the two rivers and their tributaries. Cities and farmsteads all up and down both sides of both rivers were diked, well over 180 miles of dikes were patrolled for almost three weeks.

Same here. Yes, if you don't do your homework and submit the evidence correctly, you are at the mercy of the court. Of course if your guilty, why would you be there? If not, do your homework, present a good case with evidence & witness's and you will be found innocent.

Why not? if they didn't wait, they could get the ticket. You have
"unnamed" cops that are friends, do they tell you that they only ticket people that they see, 100% do something wrong? If they say yes, they are probably lying.

That's some of my point. If he really didn't see you not stop, he's guessing. If so, then you have your witness's, do your homework and present it accordingly. I was sighted once for that offence, there was no way he could have seen me stop, let alone not stop.
I took my pictures, measurements and showed in court that there was no way that the officer could have seen me stop, let alone run the stop sign from the position he said he was in. I won, and I was only 18 years old then.

Maybe, but if your speedo is off, you can go to court, show that it was off and also show that it was repaired, most of the time the judge will dismiss the case.

I made a right hand turn onto another street, I proceeded into the right side of the lane partially into the bike lane (legal if with-in a certain distance of the intersection). Cop saw it and gave me a ticket for passing on the right. I showed with both video, pictures and measurements, after the officer said I passed on the right some 1000 to 1300' before the intersection. That being said I would have had to pass him on the right before the previous light (I had turned onto the road in front of him, so how did I pass him?) I was found innocent via US mail and the judge enclosed a note saying that I had come to the court very well prepared with my evidence in proper sequence.

hate to say it, but your wrong (again).
ham radio is playing a rather significant part alongside cell phone (where service is available).

I haven't heard much regarding cb operations down there (there is some, but given the nature of the situation, I am not sure they will be taken seriously).

That "degree of morality" is established by society, not you, and not any religious activist group. The overwhelming majority of people (>99%) feel that murder, sex crimes, etc are 'immoral'. But there isn't much of a majority condemning homosexuality. -That's- how you

HIV doesn't care if you are gay or straight. And maybe you missed the boat on this one too, but a lot of people got the disease from blood transfusions. So if you are going to suggest that AIDS is a disease that is contracted only by evil people then you are even more ignorant

Not just the First Amendment, Dave. The concept is reflected in the main body of the Constitution; "...no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States," a clause which was unanimously adopted by the Constitutional Convention.

This country was founded on the principle of religious freedom (as well as other important principles). After being forced by England to practice only one religion (the religion of the state), the new Americans wanted people to have the freedom to practice religion
according to their belief, be it Christianity, Judaism, Islam, Bhuddism, Taoism, Monoanimism..... or even no religion at all.

The USA is not, nor has it ever been, a Christian state.

Gay marriage doesn't change your legal rights and responsibilities. It doesn't change your tax filing status. It doesn't give your kids birth defects. It doesn't invalidate your will. It doesn't change your life insurance policy premiums, or any other bills you pay. It doesn't change the color of your house, the mileage of your car, or how fast the weeds grow in your garden. It doesn't affect you in any way except the way you feel.

And -you- are responsible for the way you feel, not -anybody- else.
There is nothing in the Constitution that dictates how a person should feel. If gay marriage weakens the value of your marriage, it does so only because you let it, and that's nobody's fault but your own.

If your bigoted brain had any intelligence you would realize that gay marriage would -strengthen- the value of your marriage because it provides a contrast to your own definition of the union. But that's not the case. You just hate homosexuals. It's as simple as that, isn't it, Dave?

No, it's -not- your business if I try to "poison" others by stating that I'm an atheist. You have just as much right to declare that you are a Christian (or whatever warped permutation of religion you have adopted to validate your "core beliefs"). And no group of Christians, no matter how large, has the right to impose it's version of morality on me. This is 21st Century America, not the dark ages or the Spanish Inquisition. But it -is- your business to abide by the Constitution the United States, which clearly states that religion has no place in this government. If that makes you feel bad, tuff shit. Learn to live

When I realize that people like you vote, it comes as no suprise that Bush was re-elected..... he has great appeal with the ignorant.

It's clear that you never learned the basics of your own government.
Just like you never learned the basics of electronics. The problem is that you can't possibly make an informed decision about who to vote for if you don't even know the job description! Climb down off your morality horse and learn about your own country before you wage a holy war against other Americans. And yes, even homosexuals can be American citizens. Does that diminish the value of your citizenship? If it does then you know what you can do, don't you Dave?

The range of CB radio is 5 miles or less. Why would it be considered Secrecy? Regardless:

You asked for it. Pay particular attention to definition #3:

tanï¿½giï¿½ble (P) Pronunciation Key (tnj-bl)
adj.

1 a. Discernible by the touch; palpable: a tangible roughness of the skin.
b. Possible to touch.
c. Possible to be treated as fact; real or concrete: tangible evidence.
2. Possible to understand or realize: the tangible benefits of the plan.
3. Law. That can be valued monetarily: tangible property.

Is not the RF spectrum given a monetary value by virtue of the FCC auctioning it off to the highest commercial bidders?

That makes it a tangible asset. No different than a piece of property.

The FCC owns the rights to the radio spectrum in this country. They are the ones authorized to sell spectrum to people with a legitimate need. It's no different than government owned land.

Your car is yours as is your radio gear. But the privilege to operate both is granted by the government, and can be revoked for the proper cause.

Another way to look at it. You own your car, but not the roads you drive on. You may own your radio, but not the airwaves you broadcast on.

No argument. But finding those witnesses and the evidence is the normally the problem. Too often all you have is your own account of the altercation, and that is not enough to overturn the professional account of a trained police officer, unless you get real lucky.

Because there is a difference between the letter of the law and the intent of the law. I know very few people who come to a complete stop and count to 3 before proceeding. Most of the cops I know will not cite someone if they make the effort to stop, even if the wheel may still be moving slightly. And that's the whole point. The point where a so-called "California stop" is tolerated is often up to the opinion of the cop.

>"unnamed" cops that are friends, do they tell you that they only

I'm not sure exactly what you are asking here. Are you asking me if I know of cases where the cops I know write tickets for infractions which are illegitimate? If that's the case, than no, I don't know of any. Then again, if they did, I'm sure they wouldn't tell me that.
Although one of my friends is retired now, so his risk exposure is more limited now.

Well, yea, I would think so. But if he didn't actually see you do it, then why chase you down and ticket you in the first place? And even if he did guess, it's still your word against his in court. How do you PROVE that you complied fully with the law?

> If so, then you have your witness's, do your homework >and present it accordingly.

What witnesses? You are driving alone in the car, and the only people who can testify to what happened are you and the cop.

> I was sighted once for that offence,
>there was no way he could have seen me stop, let alone not stop.
>I took my pictures, measurements and showed in court that there

Then the cop did a poor job of presenting his case, and you got off on a technicality. Your whole defense hinged on the cop's ability to see you based on their location. Something they are not required to tell you at the time they give the ticket. But congrats anyway. You managed to successfully prove your innocence. My whole point in the first place. Had you not been able to prove your innocence, the citation would have stood. Hence my original claim that you are presumed guilty and must prove your innocence in these cases.

I was also once cited for a stop sign violation. In my case, I was in an unfamiliar area, and the stop sign was not in an expected place and somewhat hidden and I blew right through it unconsciously. I drove quite a few blocks before I even noticed the cop behind me. I had no idea where he was when he "saw" me, and he didn't tell me. When he asked me if I knew I had run the stop sign, my response was "What stop sign?". He had me dead to rights and I paid the fine. But even if I had seen the stop sign and stopped at it, I would not have known where he was to mount the sort of defense that you did had he chosen to cite me for an arguably "poor" stop. In retrospect, when a cop stakes out a residential area like that, it's usually in response to neighborhood complaints. Evidently a lot of people blow through that particular stop sign. Which likely is a result of its poor placement. Something they should look into.

Probably. Again, that's why in Pa, they usually give such a wide tolerance before citing people. It's a lot harder to argue accuracy issues when you're 15 MPH or more over.

A cop is a professional law enforcement officer, trained in the law, and in observational skills. For that reason alone, you have to be better able to present your case. All things being equal, the cop is given more credibility by virtue of his job.

I don't know many people who would go to all the trouble that you did to "prove" your case. Most just appear and "plead" their case verbally. Again, that's why the speed law here has a high threshold, because the court historically will throw out speed infractions tickets which are within the realm of reasonable accuracy disputes.

A perfect example of why I don't want us going down that path.

The fundamental problem is one of lack of respect. Many people feel that their right to express themselves supersedes their responsibility to respect the rights and feelings of others. Too often those people place the burden of responsibility to other people to clean up after, or avoid their social infractions. The whole "if you don't like it, turn it off (or leave)" mentality. I find that mentality to be extremely selfish, and inconsiderate.

If they violate a specific indecency law, I would say that they're fair game.

>Because you >don't have the common sense to turn it off or change channels?

Sometimes, it's too late.

Case in point, the whole Janet Jackson escapade. People have an expectation for a certain level of programming and are unexpectedly "shocked" by something that is not within that expectation. At the very least, the government should impose strict guidelines for programmers. If you want "racy" programming, then there should be specific channels for it, and there needs to be all sorts of warnings associated with it that warn people ahead of time what they will be subjected to. So-called "family rated" channels would not be allowed to carry anything in the least bit sexually or violently explicit.
Then at least people might have some choice as to what they can see and not see. With the advent of digital TV and the ability to cram 10 or more MPEG compressed services (at 256 QAM) into the same space as one analog TV channel, bandwidth is not a problem.

Regulation does not mean an outright ban.

I agree with this, so how is this wrong? BTW, I support the idea of a "civil union" for gay people for the purpose of securing secular benefits (and liabilities) that society normally offers to married couples. I just don't want it called "marriage".

I believe that if the gay community would back off from their belligerent insistence on "gay marriage" and concentrate instead on creating civil unions, they'd have far less opposition.

Actually it may. If insurance is forced to extend benefits to same sex

It tarnishes the sanctity of marriage. If you are someone who does not believe strongly in anything, then nothing can affect you. Who was it that said that "those who will not stand for anything, stand for nothing"?

It diminishes the value of the whole institution. It's not much different in principle than earning a college degree. If they change the requirements for a college degree to only needing 2 years of course study, then it diminishes the value of that degree for those who put in their 4 years.

How does diluting an institution strengthen it?

It's easy for people like you to vilify and demonize any opposing views as hate. That's an overly simplistic justification and usually a sign of someone who's afraid to take on the topic and discuss it to the level that's needed. A common tactic employed by liberals. Are you SURE you're not a liberal Frank?

I don't "hate" anyone Frank. But I do acknowledge that homosexuals are biologically and mentally anomalous. It's not "normal" behavior no matter how much anyone wishes to sugar coat it. I also resent efforts to "normalize" obvious abnormal behavior rather than trying harder to Nope, it certainly isn't. But the fact that you do not understand the definition of "tangible" certainly is your problem.

LAW? Bullshit....THE definitive source accepted worldwide by the AP is the AP Stylebook. Others may refer to the ONLY other acceptable source,,Websters Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionary of the English Language. Neither of these contain the word "law". In fact, I checked a few online definitions and none of those contain the word "law".

>Is not the RF spectrum given a monetary >value by virtue of the FCC auctioning it off to

>.the highest commercial bidders?

Monetary value is not the same as tangible.

>That makes it a tangible asset.

No,,you may not touch it,,you may not fell it, as a requirement by virtue of the definition.

>No different than a piece of property.

Very different, but you are apt to believe that the something "tangible" can be something one can not grasp or feel. You're wrong. The be-all definition and final word of this definition you refer is as quoted:
" Of an asset having actual physical existence, as real estate or chattels, and (note the wording. It says 'AND", not "or") therefore being assigned a value in monetary terms". Something tangible, a tangible asset."

Again, in order for something to be tangible, it needs physical properties one can touch, discernible by material or substance. The sepctrum does not meet those parameters and you merely added the term
"law" on your own to the definition. You are quite the card, David.
Dishonest as hell, but quite the card.

Yep,,,once could certainly argue that jamming a repeater as Dogie did constitutes the prevention, delay or obstruction of possible emergencies.

I believe "harassment" is something that must be proved beyond a doubt by a court of law, not an internet usenet opinion. In this specific incident,Dogie not only initiated and began the harassment of many on here, mopar included, he libeled many good folks here. Once the court was made aware Dogie not only initiated such behavior, but continued a campaign of personal electronic "harassment" for many years, they would conclude he has no ground for suit. Of this, I am absolutely confident.

>You think the general public would support >your abuse of this man???

Ummm,,,,what I 'think", is the hordes would come out of the woodwork to give proper testimony (via a notarized statement) to the court concerning Dogie's abuse along with proper examples. Mopar's statements are quite benign compared to the psycho libelant Dogie's comments and threats.

This is the most important question of your life.

The question is: Are you saved?

It is not a question of how good you are,
nor if you are a church member, but are you saved?

Are you sure you will go to Heaven when you die?

The reason some people don't know for sure if they are going to Heaven when they die is because they
just don't know.

The good news is that you can know for sure that you are going to Heaven.

The Holy Bible describes Heaven as a beautiful
place with no death, sorrow, sickness or pain.

God tells us in the Holy Bible how simple it is to be saved so that we can live forever with Him
in Heaven.

"For if you confess with your mouth Jesus is Lord
and believe in your heart that God raised Him from the dead, you WILL BE SAVED." (Romans 10:9)

Over 2000 years ago God came from Heaven to earth
in the person of Jesus Christ to shed His blood
and die on a cross to pay our sin debt in full.

Jesus Christ was born in Israel supernaturally to
a virgin Jewish woman named Mary and lived a sinless
life for thirty-three years.

At the age of thirty-three Jesus was scourged and had a crown of thorns pressed onto His head then Jesus was crucified.

Three days after Jesus died on a cross and was placed in a grave Jesus rose from the dead as Jesus

said would happen before Jesus died.

If someone tells you that they are going to die and
then three days later come back to life and it actually happens then this person must be the real deal.

Jesus Christ is the only person that ever lived a perfect sinless life.

This is why Jesus is able to cover our sins(misdeeds)
with His own blood because Jesus is sinless.

The Holy Bible says, "In Him(Jesus) we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of
sins..." (Ephesians 1:7)

If you would like God to forgive you of your past, present and future sins just ask Jesus Christ to be
your Lord and Saviour.

It doesn't matter how old you are or how many bad
things that you have done in your life including
lying and stealing all the way up to murder.

Just pray the prayer below with your mouth and mean
it from your heart and God will hear you and save you.

Dear Jesus Christ, I want to be saved so that I can have a home in Heaven with You when I die. I agree with You that I am a sinner. I believe that You love me and want to save me. I believe that You bled and died on the cross to pay the penalty for my sins and that You rose from the dead. Please forgive my sins
and come into my heart and be my Lord and Saviour.
Thanks Lord Jesus Christ for forgiving me and saving
me through Your merciful grace. Amen.

Welcome to the family of God if you just allowed God
to save you.

Now you are a real Christian and you can know for sure that you will live in Heaven forever when this life comes to an end.

As a child of God we are to avoid sin(wrongdoing),
but if you do sin the Holy Bible says, "My dear
children, I write this to you so that you will not
sin. But if anybody does sin, we have one who speaks
to the Father in our defense Jesus Christ,
the Righteous One."

Those of you that have not yet decided to place your
trust in the Lord Jesus Christ may never get another chance to do so because you do not know when you

will die.

Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth and the life:
no one can come to the Father(God)(in Heaven), but
by me." (John 14:6)

This means that if you die without trusting in Jesus Christ as your Lord and Saviour you will die in your sins and be forever separated from the love of God in a place called Hell.

The Holy Bible descibes Hell as a place of eternal torment, suffering, pain and agony for all those who have rejected Jesus Christ.

The good news is that you can avoid Hell by allowing Jesus Christ to save you today. Only then will you have true peace in your life knowing that no matter
what happens you are on your way to Heaven.

Praise the Lord!
Servant of the Lord Jesus Christ

Do a Google search, limiting your search to rec.radio.cb
Then do a general web search, using Google. Spread Spectrum, Packet, and other digital modes have been discussed in rec.radio.cb with posts dating back to 1991. Typical ham, you want all the work done for you. And when are you going to upgrade from No Code Tech?

Hey,,don't be sorry. You serve a valuable lesson: you reinforce the ignorance of select hammies who are licensed for communications but are clueless and incompetent when it comes to such. Perhaps that's why you feel the need to say such things about others, after all, if you were confident and satisfied in your abilities in life, there would be no need for such actions toward others. Watch your temper now, junior. I never claimed there was a spread spectrum 11 meter cb radio. Let's go back to the grammar school level since you are so easily confused. You said freebanders don't use spread spectrum, and as always, just like a fingerprint, since you can think of no manner in which this technology can apply to the freeband, you deny it's existence. On your troubled and confused second thought and now you posit yourself for the possibility based on your very own ignorance) it must be in the form of a spread spectrum 11 meter cb

If you are so worried about the "institution" of marriage then you have bigger issues than gays. In case you haven't noticed, nearly half of all marriages end in divorce, and a large number of people get married more than once. There is also the issue of polygamy -- if you are going to claim that marriage is a religious value or that it is traditionally monogamous then you better change your tune because that's not the case. For example, King Solomon (a "servant of God") had 600 wives and 900 concubines... or was it 900 wives and 600

concubines.... whichever, it doesn't really matter. The point is that the "traditional Christian marriage" is just as much a farce in definition as it is in practice; and gay marriage has far less impact on it's "value" than legalized divorce, secular ceremonies, Joseph Smith, or even the holy doctrine of your own faith.

Referring back to your "college degree" analogy, if the standards are lowered then my degree becomes more valuable. Here's another analogy: If some of the auto makers start making cars of lower quality, what happens to the value of the vehicles made by other manufacturers? Duh.

Yes you do. You hate homosexuals. You also hate blacks. It's written all over your posts despite your efforts to hide the fact. You can justify your hatred any way you want -- even to yourself. But the more you write about such subjects, the harder you try to skirt an open admission, and the easier it is to see the bigotry in your writings. It's that 'perception window' thing I suggested you read about. Or haven't you found that book yet?

There is nothing in the Constitution that requires a person to be "normal". In fact, the world would be a pretty boring place if everyone fit within one standard deviation. But the Constitution -does- say that you can do anything you want as long as it doesn't infringe on anyone else's rights. So how does gay marriage infringe on your rights, Dave?

That's an argument used by primitive civilations to explain things which they do not understand. If you want to be a part of an enlightened society, the first thing you need to learn is that complexity does not require divine providence. But if that concept is beyond your level of comprehension you can always take up astrology, voodoo, crystal ball gazing..... or even republican economics.

I have just as much right to denouce it as you do to display it. It's Yeah, it was a whole lot better when women didn't have the right to vote, the blacks that weren't slaves had their own schools and public facilities, chemical waste could be dumped anywhere, working 16/7 for just enough to eat..... those were the good ol' days, huh?

History proves that those who don't accept the changes that come with time are destined to be left behind. That's why the Constitution is considered to be a "living" document -- it adapts to change. You, OTOH, can't.

The only people who waste their votes are the people who fall for any bullshit propoganda which proclaims that not voting for a democrat or republican is "wasting your vote".

"Morality" has been the -DOWNFALL- of more governments than you can imagine. When a government starts dictating morality is when the people usually seek a new government -- one way or another. And the best example of this in recent history is when the 13 colonies signed the Declaration of Independence.

BTW, what's the name of that tech school you claim to have attended?

Think "AM broadcast band modulator". Find a copy of the old "RCA

2726. SWR question: shorten antenna

Newsgroup: rec.radio.cb
Date: 2005-05-05 00:59:32 UTC

Message-ID: <none-9560DB.17593204052005@news.stanford.edu>

Ahoy.

I have a new CB and a new Wilson Lil Wil antenna. The instructions with the Lil Wil say to:

Check SWR on channel 1
Check SWR on channel 40
If channel 1 has a lower SWR than channel 40, cut 1/4" from the antenna top and measure again...continue until the SWR for channel 1 and 40 is about equal.

Channel 1 gave me a nice low 1:1.4
Channel 40 gave me a nasty 1:2.8

So I snipped off 1/4" and measured again.

Channel 1 gave me 1:1.3
Channel 40 gave me 1:2.5

So my question is, snipping off that 1/4" really improved the channel 1 SWR but only dropped channel 40 a little bit. How many 1/4" increments am I gonna hafta snip before these two equal out?

Also, I'm guessing that at some point, channel 1 is going to start to go back up (instead of improving)...should I stop there and live with whatever the higher channels are displaying? Rather than continuing to snip until 1 and 40 are about equal?

Thanks,

Kahuna

Keep clipping, chn 1 may go up, but even if it goes up don't go over 1.5, then depends on where you will talk more, 1-20 or 20-40 try to keep that section below 1.5.

Anything below 1:1.5 is fine. I'd say, keep snipping. Even if you use the lower channels most, you should keep clipping at least until you get channel 40 under 1:2 so you don't hurt anything on the rare occasion you do want to go all the way up to 40.

So I bought a magmount CB antenna from Radio Schmack and just stuck it in my front room for testing purposes, connected to a Midland 77-104 . Using a borrowed handheld CB, range was barely half a mile (I live in a city), but that could have just been the handheld.

I have the magmount up in the attic on a cookie sheet now. I don't have the handheld anymore for testing purposes, but I have heard nothing on channel 9 or 19 for several days, even after soliciting contacts a few times. I've got someone with a CB about 6 miles away and I have a freeway (i.e., truckers) also about 6 miles away... still can't make contact with anyone.

Is 6 miles out of reach for an attic magmount? Do I need a better ground plane or should I just give it up as a lost cause?

First, lose the mag-mount. Trade it in on the tallest whip you can fit in your attic and a standard 3/8-24 stud mount that you can secure to a beam or the attic floor. Then scrounge all the wire you can, connect them to the ground (shield) connection on the mount, and string them out for ground radials. The more the better. Don't worry about cutting them to any specific length, but make them as long as possible. If you have the entire attic floor to play with, use it. The following file might help:

Typical of you. When you are shown the error of your ways, your first defense is to attack the sources. When you claim that I am wrong on a particular usage of a word, and I provide the definition which supports my usage, you attack my dictionary. When you claimed that the last sunspot cycle was the strongest, and I provided, not one, but several web sites which claimed the opposite, you then claimed that those sources were all wrong and the only definitive source was a place in Belgium, which (not so) coincidentally has no web site to either confirm or deny your claim. When you made a claim that littering was a felony in Florida, and I provided a link to the Florida statute which showed that littering is a simple summary offense, you made some obscure claim about "greenways", presumably as allusion to a special environmental situation where an infraction would be considered a felony. But that's not simple littering.

You are doing it again, with your attempt to weasel out of yet another of your erroneous claims. My source, and you can read it yourself, is easy:

It certainly can be construed as such. The FCC seems to think so.

Being able to physically touch something is only ONE aspect of the definition of tangible. It is not the ONLY one.

No, that's only part of it. Tangible is also applicable to something that can be realized and treated as fact. It does not have to have physical properties.

Again, that's only ONE aspect of it.

No, but while inside the borders, you will pay (Sometimes dearly) the FCC for the right to play on the airwaves. Ask any cell phone company owner/administrator.

Yes, it is different in some ways, but the ways that are similar are what I am talking about. It's a fact that the FCC sells off chunks of spectrum to commercial interests, sometimes for outrageous amounts. If the FCC was not in the position to claim "ownership" of that spectrum, how could they auction it off?

Right! On you own land. But venture out on the public street, and they have all the authority. Same goes for radio. If you can somehow prevent your signal from escaping the borders of your property (Which is covered by FCC Part 15), you could do what you want. Once those signals escape into the public venue, they are under the control of the federal government.

And administered by the government.

For all practical purposes, yes they do in this country.

You do not have a "right" to transmit beyond the confines of your own property. You are granted a "privilege" to do so by the government in the proxy of the FCC. As a condition of that privilege comes your responsibility to abide by the rules set fort in various FCC parts depending on which service you are using.

You may not like it, but that's the way it is.

No argument (and I'll keep that in mind for the next time I visit there). I'm sure it is very much "area dependant". It is also at the discretion of the cop. The letter of the law gives them the authority to be as strict as they want in applying the law. But just like speeding, there are enough blatant violators out there that they don't have to nit pick with those borderline cases. Cops don't want to risk citing someone like Landshark who actually is savvy enough to win his case. At least not in my area. But I live in a semi-rural area, where there is more likely to be horse drawn wagons than hordes of pedestrians.

What votes? When have we voted on anything remotely resembling such?
Most "gay friendly" laws have come as a result of judicial rulings as a result of a circuit court's interpretation. A duty which is beyond the scope of their responsibilities. It's up to the legislature to make such laws.

A few states have enacted such legislation. Several other states have definitively banned them. And some of those states have done so by popular vote, and have won by a significant majority.

There it is...

Without knowing anything about me, without knowing what I do for a living, without knowing the things I've done over the past three decades in the field of computers and radio, without knowing who I am, you make a huge jump in logic and begin to personnally attack me verbally. You couldn't just laugh with me and then drop it, could you?

You've shown me that you do know something. You're able to convey meaning over these posts. The trouble is, the meaning you convey creates a sense of ill-will and you know it. You don't add anything of value to these posts. You've made it clear you are not a team player. You do it because of the false sense of superiority created when you come out with these baseless one-liners and cause confusion, anger, chaos. You think you're superior because you don't follow the rules. You don't feel you need to follow the rules. You think you're above the rules. You think rules are created for just some people. You think rules are for the ignorant. You are not ignorant, therefore you feel obligated to disobey the rules to make a statement.

I'll be the first to admit there are some hams who are clueless these days. But at least they've proven a certain level of knowledge by passing a simple test. Hams have shown they can meet some standard (albeit not much of a standard these days) compared to others in society. You seem to be a reasonably smart guy, why don't you get a ham license? Just because you're a ham doesn't mean you can't continue FREEBANDING. Getting a ham license will only increase your opportunities. You've shown you can talk the talk but for some reason refuse to walk the talk. Unless you can write something down and explain why you refuse to walk the talk, I have to come to the conclusion you can't walk the talk.

The difference between CBers and Hams is patently obvious to anyone who tunes around HF.

The next step is name calling. After that comes the vandalism. When I catch you vandalizing my property you will attack me physically. When I defend myself, your lawyer will say I violated your rights.

You win, oh great one, you win.

Go ahead, get in at least one more personal attack. Go ahead, tell me I can't count sentences. Go ahead, make another statement about how CBers are superior to hams. Go ahead, tell me the reason you don't get a ham license is because hams are "poopie-heads." Go ahead, insert, "I know you are but what am I?" in between each of the above paragraphs. Go ahead, ask me some stupid questions, and when I don't answer them, use them in future "one-liner" posts to show how ignorant hams are.

SK

Sincerely, with warmest regards and the best of intentions,
Guy

I have a 6 foot Firestick in the attic, but I have 8 wires as a ground plane. They are about 9 feet long. I did OK, and even shot skip. But I figured 10 miles was tops locally. I am installing a Imax in a tree on Sat and Sun. SO the Firestick will be out of service. My suggestion is if you have limited space, use a dipole which would be about 18 feet long, and you can hang in horizontally along the peak of your attic. It should improve your local contacts. Not great, but better than a magmount.

Typical tactic. Justify a particular abhorrent behavior by making unrelated comparisons to other abhorrent behaviors.

A traditional monogamous marriage has been the norm for over 1000 years. At no time in our history was a same sex union ever been justified. The fact that polygamy might have been acceptable once does not mean that a gay marriage should be now. Your comparison of such is an example of a weak analogy logical fallacy.

Only to you. After a few years go by, everyone will then consider a BS degree to be a 2 year course. You will have to remind people (and by doing so be construed as bragging in much the same way that a 20 WPM Extra reminds people that he passed a tougher code exam than the current 5 WPM extra) of the fact that you had an additional 2 years of study, thereby propping up your perceived value. The public at large will not be immediately aware of your "extra" work. Therefore it has diminished in value.

> Here's another analogy:

That's not a good analogy in this situation. For this analogy to be applicable, you would have to offer 2 different "marriage systems".
One allowing gays, and one not. Then a relative value comparison between two distinct entities can accurately be assessed.

Where have I ever made any statement about blacks in a negative way?

You are yet again adopting liberal "debate" topics by demonizing the opposition by referring to them with words that end in -ist. The tactic of course is to silence opposition, rather than encourage open debate of the issues. By branding the opposition with such a label as "racist" you attempt to discredit any perspective that they may have
by virtue of a perceived badge of unworthiness.

There are problems within many of the ethnic, racial and gender-based communities. Calling attention to these issues does not make one (Insert word here) -ist.

I also noticed that you snipped the part of your last response where you called me a "holy roller religious wacko". After retrospection, I'm sure you realized that in making such a statement, you are practicing the very same intolerance and bigotry for other viewpoints as you had accused me of doing, thereby exposing your own hypocrisy.

But the synergistic and symbiotic nature of our complex ecosystem is such that suggestions that it all evolved randomly is a ludicrous position to take. Order does not come from chaos without help.

This is not an endorsement for any particular religion. Just an observation that the probability is high, that there has been an intelligent hand guiding the development of life on this planet.

There is no place in the constitution where it calls for "separation of church and state". What we have is the establishment clause, which only states that the government shall not establish any religion as a "state" religion, or prohibit the free exercise of religion. Nowhere does it say that matters of state shall not have religious inspiration or influence.

Another typical liberal tactic. The use of extreme strawman comparisons in order to polarize and vilify the opposing position.
These strawman examples bare a sight resemblance or relationship to the main topic, but are a weaker argument and very easy to knock down and discredit, (And by the false analogy fallacy, associate to the main topic) thereby avoiding discussing the main points of the debate.

That's why the Catholic Church is still here. It's survived some pretty radical social changes over the years.

When? If you are a true constitutionalist, as you have claimed, then how can you, on one hand, claim to uphold the values and insight of the framers, and on the other hand, claim that the constitution should "adapt to the changing times". Either the constitution is a document of incredible insight and wisdom, that remains timeless, or it is a "living document" which can change its meaning at any time, including changes to prohibit such things as gay marriage.

So which is it?

Another in a series of contradictions in your logic Frank.

The United States came to be when they adopted their own not cease to exist as a result of it.

There's a difference between intrinsic morality, and a desperate attempt to reign in an out of control population by legislating it.
Once you get to that level, your done. We are gradually heading that way.

Well, one of two possibilities exist. Either the earth cooled, formed water, created primordial amino acids which somehow morphed into single celled life, which then somehow determined the need to further specialize and diversify, and all species evolved from there. Somehow they knew that we'd need plants to make oxygen, for the animals that need it. Some species would become food for others. All of this raises many questions, the biggest of which is what force drove these single celled organisms to improve and specialize themselves? What drives evolution? Can accidental random mutation answer these questions satisfactorily.

The other possibility is that our existence was carefully guided by an intelligent force. Applying Occam's razor, which scenario is easier to believe?

Yes, but it based on probability.

But what drives evolution? If random mutations are the basis for evolution, then what prevents "bad mutations" or several different

Natural selection only answers some of those questions.

There is much scientific evidence to support the theory of evolution.
I am not trying to discount it at all. Quite the opposite, I totally endorse the concept of evolution. The difference is that I believe that evolution was "helped" along by an outside intelligence.

You are correct, it is possible to cut too much off, and the Channel 1 SWR will start going up. But, there is nothing terribly wrong with the readings your getting. It's always nice to get a better match, so I would continue clipping, but only until you get the Channel 40 SWR down below 1:2. Then don't worry about it. The Channel 1 SWR is already very good, and you are never going to notice the slight mismatch at the high end.

I've been watching this topic with some interest. IMHO the only true method of SS is the direct sequencing method. Frequency hopping sort of "cheats" the concept of a wideband and barely distinguishable SS system. Direct sequence is also more secure than FH.

Nonetheless, frequency hopping is considered spread spectrum in today's marketplace.

As far as using SS on 11 meters, well..... First off, there are no commercial CB radios made with this technology. Even hams have been slow to embrace it. That's not to say that enterprising experimenters have not played with it on 11 meters. Utilizing cordless phones and transverters might yield satisfactory results. I'm sure there may be a few that have. But it's hardly in widespread use.

Gun Threat? Hey, that is no threat, you threaten my life, health or property (well, property isn't that big a thing--a mans life is worth more--I'd have to make that decision based on the events of the time) and the gun ISN'T a threat!!! It is a tool to insure my survival!!!

Hello, Dave

The problem would be SWR with the requisite bandwidth. Of course, if anyone has any of those old Heathkit Cantennas :)

There is a thought. 1.1 to 1 SWR from something like zero to 30 MHz. Not bad somewhat above too; just add oil and turn on your amplifier LOL.

Hey,,don't be sorry. You serve a valuable lesson: you reinforce the ignorance of select hammies who are licensed for communications but are clueless and incompetent when it comes to such. Perhaps that's why you feel the need to say such things about others, after all, if you were confident and satisfied in your abilities in life, there would be no need for such actions toward others. Witout knowing anything about me, without knowing the things I;ve done over the past three decades, without knowing any damn thing about me, you make a huge jump in logic and begin to assume to know what and how I think. In addition, you ASSume I am of the "turn it all the way to the right" crowd. Stop throwing stones while you sit constipated in a glass house, hypocrite.

> You couldn't just laugh with me and then drop >it, could you?

You mean, take your unprovoked cut directed toward me in silence? That's always been your childish problem. Get over yourself.

>You've shown me that you do know

What part of you assuming to know what I think regarding spread spectrum and turning the mic all the way up do you attribute to good will? Hyuk!

.you initiated it. Get over yourself and that small man syndrome may depart.

There you go again with that jackass ignorance of ASSuming you know how I think. You're a freakin' hypocrite of the worst magnitude.

>You don't feel you need to follow the rules.

Not at all,,I don't feel I need to explain myself to the likes of someone like you with a mentality that feels unprovoked and unsolicited barbs toward another by yourself constitute anything but ill-will. Note that to excuse your initated cut, you shrug it off as a joke. Now wipe your chin before the drool reaches the bib that catches your hypocrisy.

>You think you're above the rules.

I'm merely adding to your self-image. Of course, you presenting yourself as knowing what and how I think is somehow done of your good will,,,,especially when taken into consideration your deliberate false misattributions that make you such a loser.

>You think rules are created for just some

No at all. I think you are bordering on ignorant, by initiating a barb and defecating all over yourself when it was returned.

Perhaps that is default mode to your warped interpretation of things you can not grasp.

Stay relevant. A hammie license has nothing to do with these pages or cb.

>Just because you're a ham doesn't mean you >can't continue FREEBANDING.

Check the archives. I've made that point on many occasions. Thing is, it's more difficult because too many jerkoffs like yourself are out there who feel when they are not given a satisfactory reason by others for their business and behavior, it's perfectly acceptable to conjure up reasons on your own and ASSume them of those who won't give you the time of day. That and your bullshit belief you are owed some sort of explanation for other's behavior. It's because of your shitty attitude,,,,and THAT, will never change. Again, you are owed nothing,,,nada,,zip,,let alone a reason,for other's actions.

> Getting a ham license will only increase your >opportunities. You've shown you can talk the >.talk but for some reason refuse to walk the

I see your position, but it is ONLY because -you- continue to ASSume many conjured misbeliefs.

>Unless you can write something down and >explain why you refuse to walk the talk, I have >to come to the conclusion you can't walk the >talk.

And with this post, you have solidified beyond a doubt you are a hypocrite of the N'th magnitude.

>The difference between CBers and Hams is >patently obvious to anyone who tunes around

>HF.

Yet, you continue to express difficulty with such a conceptual difference by claiming you can not understand why one would not get a license. Again, and as always, this is YOUR problem you seek to foster on others who have nothing to do with your beliefs or demons. Oh,,wait a second, I'M your demon,,,LMAO!

>The next step is name calling.

You mean aftre your little unprovoked insult you say is a joke that I should have laughed at?
You're not that skilled in communications...here we go again.....you epitomize the fact that some of those licensed for communications are the least adept and skilled at such. Otherwise, you would never expect a "stranger" to insult another person of whcih they "know nothing of me" and expect them to laugh. In fact, the next step, as you say, is where I factly state you would never do such to a person on the street. Your demeanor affirms it, your communication skill reaffirms it.

>After that >comes the vandalism. When I catch you >vandalizing my property you will attack me >physically. When I defend myself, your lawyer >will say I violated your rights.

Man, you must have really had your wings clipped in this group for you to ASSume so damn much of others you know nothing about...lmao!

>You win, oh great one, you win.

>Go ahead, get in at least one more personal >attack. Go ahead, tell me I can't count >sentences. Go ahead, make another >statement about how CBers are superior to Heheh..well, you are a liar, as well. Not one time in this group, ever, have I ever said cbers are superior to hammies, but your rigid position at trying to steadfastly misattribute your false ASSumptions to myself, illustrates what a jack off you are, also.

>Go ahead, tell me the reason you don't get a

I'm not up on the latest encryption technique regrading this technology, really? my original post that you responded too said nothing about freeband. in fact it said

>>11 meter cb spread spectrum? i don't think so.
nothing about freeband there your response was

>Digital Spread has another name when applied to such. Ask an >upperclassman hammie to elmer you with this difficulty you profess.

hmm, nothing about freeband from you either.
the only gasket you blew in someones gray matter was your own.
and now you are so wrapped up in yourself bathering about freeband.
blather in little boy

Thanks. He goes on to prove a couple of my points, like, accusing me of doing what he does, calling me names, demonstrating he can't read what I wrote, not claiming to be what he has claimed to be in other posts, cursing at me, etc. If you read it, you can almost feel that vein in his forehead about to explode. I'll lay off him for a while. He's so predictable, it's not even fun.

Thanks once again.

$$$$MAKE EASY AND QUICK CASH WITH 6 DOLLARS$$$$ MAKE EASY AND QUICK CASH MONEY by doing almost nothing (NO JOKE, NO SCAM, AND VERY LEGAL) Please read on! You will be very thankful you did!
A little while back, I was browsing through newsgroups, just like you are now, and came across an article similar to this that said you could make thousands of dollars within weeks with only an initial investment of$6.00! So I thought," Yeah, right, this must be a scam", but like most of us, I was curious, so I kept reading. Anyway, it said that you send $1.00 to each of the 6 names and address stated in the article. You then place your own name and address in the bottom of the list at #6, and post the article in at least 200 newsgroups. (There are thousands) No catch, that was it. So after thinking it over, and talking to a few people first, I thought about trying it. I figured what have I got to lose except 6 stamps and $6.00, right? Like most of us I was a little skeptical and a little worried about the legal aspects of it all. So I checked it out with the U.S. Post Office (1-800-725-2161) and they confirmed that it is indeed legal! Then I invested the measly $6.00. Well GUESS WHAT!!...
Within 7 days, I started getting money in the mail! I was shocked! I figured it would end soon, but the money just kept coming in. In my first week, I made about $25.00.
By the end of the second week I had made a total of over $1,000.00! In the third week I had over $10,000.00 and it's still growing. This is now my fourth week and I have made a total of just over $42,000.00 and it's still coming in rapidly. It's certainly worth $6.00, and 6 stamps, I have spent more than that on the lottery!! Let me tell you how this works and most importantly, why it works.... also, make sure you print a copy of this article
NOW, so you can get the information off of it as you need it.
STEP 1
Get 6 separate pieces of paper and write the following on each piece of paper "PLEASE PUT ME ON YOUR MAILING LIST" along your name and address Now get 6 US $1.00 bills and place ONE inside EACH of the 6 pieces of paper so the bill will not be seen through the envelope to prevent thievery. Next, place one paper in each of the 6 envelopes and seal them. You should now have 6 sealed envelopes, each with a piece of paper stating the above phrase, your name and address, and a $1.00 bill. What you are doing is creating a service by this. THIS IS ABSOLUTELY LEGAL! This program remains successful because of the honesty and integrity of the participants. Please continue its success by carefully adhering to the instructions. You will now become part of the Mail Order business. Your product is simply a service of helping develop mail lists. Mail the 6 envelopes to the following addresses:

#1]
Devin Wiggins
4517 Runnymeade rd
owings mills, MD 21117
#2]
J. Willard
2845 Rockford Rd
Boonville, NC 27011
#3]
D. Wiggins
4517 Runnymeade rd
owings mills, MD 21117
#4]
Markarabee Fields
1580 Belleville Rd
Orangeburg, SC 29115
#5]
S. Gibbon
P.O. BOX 2454
BUNDABERG Q 4670 AUSTRALIA
#6]
Joseph Anderson
15317 Rayen St. North Hills CA. 91343
USA
STEP 2
Now take the #1 name and address off the list that you see above, move the other names up (6 becomes 5, 5 becomes 4, etc...) and add YOUR Name and address as number 6 on the list.
STEP 3
Change anything you need to, but try to keep this article as close to original as possible. Now, post your amended article to at least 200 newsgroups. (I think there are close to 24,000 groups) All you need is 200, but remember, the more you post, the more money you make!
---DIRECTIONS--HOW TO POST TO NEWSGROUPS----------
Step 1
You do not need to re-type this entire letter to do your own posting. Simply put your cursor at the beginning of this letter and drag your cursor to the bottom of this document, and select 'copy' from the edit menu. This will copy the entire letter into the computers memory.

Step 2
Open a blank 'notepad' file and place your cursor at the top of the blank page. From the 'edit' menu select 'paste'. This will paste a copy of the letter into notepad so that you can add your name to the list.
Step 3
Save your new notepad file as a .txt file. If you want to do your postings in different sittings, you'll always have this file to go back to.
Step 4
Use Netscape or Internet explorer and try searching for various newsgroups (on-line forums, message boards, chat sites, discussions.)
Step 5
Visit these message boards and post this article as a new message by highlighting the text of this letter and selecting paste from the edit menu. Fill in the Subject, this will be the header that everyone sees as they scroll through the list of postings in a particular group, click the post message button. You're done with your first one!
Congratulations...THAT'S IT! All you have to do is jump to different newsgroups and post away, after you get the hang of it, it will take about 30 seconds for each newsgroup! REMEMBER, THE MORE NEWSGROUPS YOU POST IN, THE MORE MONEY YOU WILL MAKE!! BUT YOU HAVE TO POST A MINIMUM OF 200
That's it! You will begin receiving money from around the world within days! You may eventually want to rent a P.O. Box due to the large amount of mail you will receive. If you wish to stay anonymous, you can invent a name to use, as long as the postman will deliver it. JUST MAKE SURE ALL THE ADDRESSES ARE CORRECT.
----NOW THE WHY PART-------
Out of 200 postings, say I receive only 5 replies (a very low example). So then I made $5.00 with my name and address at #6 on the letter. Now, each of the 5 persons who just sent me $1.00 make the MINIMUM 200 postings, each with my name and address at #5 and only 5 persons respond to each of the original 5, that is another $25.00 for me, now those 25 each make 200 MINIMUM posts with my name and address at #4 and only 5 replies each, I will bring in an additional $125.00! Now, those 125 persons turn around and post the MINIMUM 200 with my name and address at #3 and only receive 5 replies each,

I will make an additional $626.00! OK, now here is the fun part, each of those 625 persons post a MINIMUM 200 letters with my name and address at #2 and they each only receive 5 replies, that just made me $3,125.00!!! Those 3,125 persons will all deliver this message to 200 newsgroups with my name and address at #1 and if still 5 persons per 200 newsgroups react I will receive $15,625,00! With an original investment of only $6.00! AMAZING! When your name is no longer on the list, you just take the latest posting in the newsgroups, and send out another $6.00 to names on the list, putting your name at number 6 again. And start posting again. The thing to remember is, do you realize that thousands of people all over the world are joining the internet and reading these articles everyday, JUST LIKE YOU are now!! So can you afford $6.00 and see if it really works?? I think so... People have said,
"what if the plan is played out and no one sends you the money? So what! What are the chances of that happening when there are tons of new honest users and new honest people who are joining the internet and newsgroups everyday and are willing to give it a try? Estimates are at 20,000 to 50,000 new users, every day, with thousands of those joining the actual internet. Remember, play FAIRLY and HONESTLY and this will work.
ALSO REMEMBER: SEND YOUR $1 OUT TO EVERYONE ON THE LIST, EVEN IF THEY ARE NOT FROM YOUR COUNTRY.
WHAT ARE YOU WAITING FOR???
GOOD LUCK!!
Go to google.com and search for MAKE MONEY FAST AND EASY$$ and you will find alot of message boards!
MAKE MONEY FAST AND EASY$$

Despite the fact that this majority of Christian citizens is not a majority of American citizens, seperation of church and state is not subject to a majority vote.

Swearing on a bible is -not- required to take an oath of affirmation.
The clause forbidding a "religous test" was added to -prevent- exactly what you claim. It was added because, at the time, some states had oaths that required the person entering office to declare a belief in God or a "divine inspiration". Such an oath was a "religious test" that was required to qualify for the office, and excluded anyone that didn't share the same religious beliefs. This violated the seperation of church and state, so the clause was added to prohibit such tests, and the office would be available to any citizen -despite- religious beliefs.

And once again, the clause was added by unanimous consent.

What parts do I ignore? Let me clue you in here, Dave: Many years ago
I took an oath to "protect and defend the Constitution against all enemies, foreign and domestic". I took that oath seriously. In fact, I took it so seriously that I took the time to learn more about what I swore to defend with my life. Maybe if you had taken that oath yourself you might have done the same. If you had, we wouldn't be having this conversation right now.

And although I was discharged 20 years ago, I still hold myself to that oath. Meaning that I will still defend it with my life if it comes under attack -- even if that attack comes from a large group of people claiming to be Christians.

No, it's very true. You skipped right over the line, "The U.S. Census Bureau does not collect the number of marriages and divorces that take place in a given year." That statistic is collected by the CDC. And for the year of 2003, the divorce rate was -almost exactly- half the rate of marriage:

It's a very logical and justifiable tactic, Dave. If the foundation of your argument is that gay marriage weakens the value of marriage, it's both fair and reasonable to compare gay marriage to other factors that would affect the value of marriage. And after such a comparison, gay marriage is -barely- significant, if at all. Yet you are whining about it like a stuck pig while denying those other, much more significant factors. The conclusion is obvious: this has absolutely nothing to do with the value of marriage. You simply hate homosexuals.

I never suggested it did. I was pointing out that your "traditional Christian values" regarding marriage are, at best, hypocritical.

Because people like you exist, some will undoubtedly see it that way. But some, like myself, will already understand that those two extra years mean the difference between 'good' and 'better'.

I'm not going to make justifications for your bigotry, Dave. How you feel about your own marriage is not dependent upon anyone else but yourself. The Constitution is not going to change just because a couple gays getting married affects the way you feel about your own marriage.

That's about the most ignorant pseudo-scientific argument I have ever heard in favor of creationsim. If you are going to play biochemist at least show a little knowledge of the subject. You could at least address the fact that an imbalance in a complex equilibrium will result in a more complex equilibrium. Or that an ocean full of primordial soup doesn't just sit there and stew in a state of homeostatis -- it's under a constant barrage from a large number of ionizing radiations that can change it's chemistry. After a couple billion years it's hardly inconceivable that symbiotic relationships not only could exist on a planetary scale, but that a threshold of self-sustaining complexity could occur. In fact, it's far more plausible than concluding that everything was willed into existence by some super-ghost.

Or a discone. That's one of the preferred commercial antennas for SS on VHF/UHF. SWR isn't flat but it's low over a 10:1 range of spectrum.
The only problem is the poor gain. I wonder if anyone has ever tried to build a phased discone array.....

    Hell give me a TS 50 it has dual finals with 200 watts p-p and clean. Danm it even works the freeband with no power loss. Oh thats right it does not roger beep, shit I do not know what to do without roger beep.

I prefer an ever-so-slight tinge of echo over roger beep....not a repeat, not several echoes, but a single, solitary, slight echo,,somewhere between one and two on the Galaxy setting...on many radios it sounds like one is in an empty room,,,but on certain radios, it does exactly what the echoeffect intended. There is a reason all those commercial ads on commercial radio have a very slight echo effect....they simply stand out above the rest. Have yourself a very merry weekend!

Riiight! This neatly explains why so many bucks are spent on those ads

This "privilege" is availabe to anyone, so how can it be referred a privilege? I know you elitist hammies believe this to be true about your ticket, but it simply does not apply to cb, as practically any American citizen is granted the "right" to broadcast, via a cb, simply by ownership of one. | >swearing on the bible is a confirmation that Judeo-Christian
| >influences have been intertwined in our government from the beginning?
| Swearing on a bible is -not- required to take an oath of affirmation.
| The clause forbidding a "religous test" was added to -prevent- exactly
| what you claim. It was added because, at the time, some states had
| oaths that required the person entering office to declare a belief in
| God or a "divine inspiration". Such an oath was a "religious test"
| that was required to qualify for the office, and excluded anyone that
| didn't share the same religious beliefs. This violated the seperation
| of church and state, so the clause was added to prohibit such tests,
| and the office would be available to any citizen -despite- religious | beliefs.
|
| And once again, the clause was added by unanimous consent.

| What parts do I ignore? Let me clue you in here, Dave: Many years ago
| I took an oath to "protect and defend the Constitution against all
| enemies, foreign and domestic". I took that oath seriously. In fact, I
| took it so seriously that I took the time to learn more about what I
| swore to defend with my life. Maybe if you had taken that oath
| yourself you might have done the same. If you had, we wouldn't be
| having this conversation right now.
| And although I was discharged 20 years ago, I still hold myself to
| that oath. Meaning that I will still defend it with my life if it
| comes under attack -- even if that attack comes from a large group of

| No, it's very true. You skipped right over the line, "The U.S. Census
| Bureau does not collect the number of marriages and divorces that take

| It's a very logical and justifiable tactic, Dave. If the foundation of
| your argument is that gay marriage weakens the value of marriage, it's
| both fair and reasonable to compare gay marriage to other factors that
| would affect the value of marriage. And after such a comparison, gay
| marriage is -barely- significant, if at all. Yet you are whining about
| it like a stuck pig while denying those other, much more significant
| factors. The conclusion is obvious: this has absolutely nothing to do
| with the value of marriage. You simply hate homosexuals.
|
| <snip>
| > The fact that polygamy might have been acceptable once does

| Hardly. If the standards are lowered then I have an education that | meets a higher standard, and I am therefore more qualified -- out of
| the gate -- than someone with a lesser education.
|

| I'm not going to make justifications for your bigotry, Dave. How you

So I bought a magmount CB antenna from Radio Schmack and just stuck it in my front room for testing purposes, connected to a Midland 77-104 . Using a borrowed handheld CB, range was barely half a mile (I live in a city), but that could have just been the handheld.
I have the magmount up in the attic on a cookie sheet now. I don't have the handheld anymore for testing purposes, but I have heard nothing on channel 9 or 19 for several days, even after soliciting contacts a few times. I've got someone with a CB about 6 miles away and I have a freeway (i.e., truckers) also about 6 miles away... still can't make contact with anyone.
Is 6 miles out of reach for an attic magmount? Do I need a better ground plane or should I just give it up as a lost cause?

For continuous reliable communications, get a base antenna if at all possible,,it will give you better results than a mag mount. 6 miles is an unrealistic goal in the city for reliable continuous communications with your current set-up..unless you're on the top floor of a multi-story tall building. If there is any way you cacn erect a base antenna, even an antron,..go for it.,

The technology is there,,you just have to -learn- it. Tell you what,,think about part 15 transceivers,,,,think about chips,..... now think about different modes,,outside the box....think about UHF.....now,,,if you still are confused, please explain why automatic hopping of freqs on the freeband is such a difficult concept for you.
Since you can't seem to grasp this idea, forget about even casually mentioning digital sequencing to you,,,,you'd win the pool!!! :)

(I've been watching this topic with some interest. IMHO the only true method of SS is the direct sequencing method.)

Yea,,that's what i meant when I said "digital" sequencing.

(Frequency
hopping sort of "cheats" the concept of a wideband and barely distinguishable SS system.)

Yea,,I guess it could be seen that way,,,but,,why couldn't the technology be programmed to hop "wider" (for lack of a better term at the moment)?

(Direct sequence is also more secure than FH.)

I'm not up on the latest encryption technique regarding this technology, but take your word for it. But,,,why would a direct sequence (definite pattern) be more secure than a random pattern?

(Nonetheless, frequency hopping is considered spread spectrum in today's marketplace.)

Yep it is.

(As far as using SS on 11 meters, well..... First off, there are no commercial CB radios made with this technology.)

I never said there was. I said the technology was there and blew a gasket in a certain poster's gray matter and now he is all wrapped up in himself blathering incoherently about a cb radio when I referred the freeband.

>really?

Really.

>my original post that you responded too said

LMAO,what a lying POS you are...that's why you changed the topic header,,so the post I replied to regarding freeband would be forgot...what a CARD!

That's because they -are- one. The Bill of Rights is just a name used for the first ten Amendments to the Constitution. Actually, the bill contained twelve amendments, but the first two didn't pass. One of those two amendments passed 150 years later. The other one deserves reconsideration -- it would establish an upper limit on the number of people that can be represented by a member of the House of Reps.

>And, you are right again, we do indeed have freedom of religion--the "state"

Absolutely right. Religious freedom is for -everybody-, not just the majority. If the government starts playing favorites then the freedoms enjoyed by the minorities are stifled, and we regress back to the same type of government that ruled over the colonies until they declared independence from Britain.

LMAO,what a lying POS you are...thats why you changed the topic to freeband. so the post that i made regarding 11 meters would be forgot..what a card!

That's a pretty stupid observation right there. If he replys to dumbass's post to, or about, him, in other words a basic open invitation, why would that be considered stalking.

Hi, gang

Keep in mind that our national debt is over $100,000 for every man, woman, and child in the United States. Not to throw cold water on any celebration, but I have been nervous for a while and am getting more so every day.

The U.K. groups want to get rid of Tony Blair; I have offered to trade George Bush for him, but no one wants Bush either. In fact, they want Bush even less than Blair.

I'll have to try some other groups LOL.

Best regards from Rochester, NY

Your theory is right but your numbers don't make sense to me. If you snipped off some and the ch40 reading went down... then the ch1 reading should have increased. By the way... Lil Wils are not much good. They are notoroius for bad matching characteristics because of their very short length. The performance of that short an antenna is very poor.

Cookie sheet... LOL.... what is your match???
I'm afraid that may not be a big enough ground plane. If you want a better ground plane you need to run some radials (maybe four or more) that have perhaps a quarter wavelength length. You could use aluminum grounding wire which is available from Radio Sack. Keep in mind that signals in the CB frequencies have poor penetrating power through solid objects... like your roof. You'd do much better to move whatever installation you choose outside.

Only if the dip is between 1 and 40. His antenna was too long for channel 1 so shortening it reduced the SWR across the band.

MAKE ALOT OF MONEY!!! NOT A SCAM
PLZ READ

Posted By: David
Date: Saturday, 24 April 2005

"Hi, I'm 23 and I make more money than my parents and so can you"
Turn $6.00 into $60,000...read this to find out how!!!
READING THIS COULD CHANGE YOUR LIFE!
I found this on a bulletin board like this one and decided to try it.
A little while back, I was browsing through a newsgroups, just like you are now, and came across an article similar to this that said you could make thousands of dollars within weeks with only an initial investment of $6.00! So I thought, "Yeah right, this must be a scam", but like most of us, I was curious, so I kept reading.
Anyway, it said that you need to send $1.00 to each of the 6 names and address stated in the article.
You then place your own name and address in the bottom of the list at #6, and post the article in at least 200 newsgroups. (There are millions) No catch, that was it.
So after thinking it over, and talking to a few people first, I thought about trying it. I figured: "what have I got to lose except 6 stamps and $6.00, right?"
Then I invested the measly $6.00. Well GUESS WHAT!!... within 7 days, I started getting money in the mail! I was shocked! I figured it would end soon, but the money just kept coming in.
In my first week, I made about $25.00. By the end of the second week I had made a total of over $1,000.00! In the third week I had over $10,000.00 and it's still growing.
This is now my fourth week and I have made just over $42,000.00 and it's still coming in rapidly. It's certainly worth $6.00, and 6 stamps, I have spent more than that on the lottery!!
Let me tell you how this works and most importantly, why it works....
Also, make sure you print a copy of this article NOW, so you can get the information off of it as you need

it.
I promise you that if you follow the directions exactly, that you will start making more money than you thought possible by doing something so easy!
Suggestion:
Read this entire message carefully! (print it out or download it.)
Follow the simple directions and watch the money come in! It's easy. It's legal. And, your investment is only $6.00 (Plus postage)
IMPORTANT:
This is not a rip-off; it is not indecent; it is not illegal; and it is virtually no risk - it really works!!!! If all of the following instructions are adhered to, you will receive extraordinary dividends.
PLEASE NOTE:
Please follow these directions EXACTLY, and $50,000 or more can be yours in 20 to 60
days.
This program remains successful because of the honesty and integrity of the participants.
Please continue it's success by carefully adhering to the instructions.
You will now become part of the Mail Order business. In this business your product is not solid and tangible, it's a service. You are in the business of developing Mailing Lists.
Many large corporations are happy to pay big bucks for quality lists. However, the money made from the mailing lists is secondary to the income which is made from people like you and me asking to be included in that list.

Here are the 4 easy steps to success:
STEP 1:
Get 6 separate pieces of paper and write the following on each piece of paper "PLEASE
PUT ME ON YOUR MAILING LIST."
Now get 6 US $1.00 bills and place ONE inside EACH of the 6 pieces of paper so the bill will not be seen through the envelope (to prevent thievery).
Next, place one paper in each of the 6 envelopes and seal them. You should now have 6
sealed envelopes, each with a piece of paper stating the phrase "PLEASE PUT ME ON YOUR MAILING LIST.", your name and address, and a $1.00 bill. What you are doing is creating a service. THIS IS ABSOLUTELY LEGAL! You are requesting a legitimate service and you are paying for it!

Like most of us I was a little skeptical and a little worried about the legal aspects of it all.
So I checked it out with the U.S. Post Office (1-800-725-2161) and they confirmed that it is indeed legal! Mail the 6 envelopes to the following addresses:

#1)S.R. Johnson : 3285 Lewis Ave. : Signal Hill, CA 90807
#2)B. Hooper : 3 Warringah Gve. : Petrie, QLD, Australia 4502
#3)Matthew Speight : 6 Charnwood Ave. : Belfast : N. Ireland : BT15 5DH
#4)Andrew Hunter . 7520-1 South Aragon Blvd . Sunrise, FL 33313
#5)Salvatore De Luca . 102 Overlook Ave . North Haledon, NJ 07508
#6)D.Crosby . 80 Fulling Mill Lane: Fairfield, CT. 06824

STEP 2: Now take the #1 name off the list that you see above, move the other names up
(6 becomes 5, 5 becomes 4, etc...) and add YOUR Name as number 6 on the list.
STEP 3: Change anything you need to, but try to keep this article as close to original as possible. Now, post your amended article to at least 200 newsgroups. (I think there are close to 2.4million groups) All you need is 200, but remember, the more you post, the more money you make!
This is perfectly legal! If you have any doubts, refer to Title 18 Sec. 1302 & 1341 of the Postal lottery laws. Keep a copy of these steps for yourself and, whenever you need money, you can use it again, and again.
PLEASE REMEMBER that this program remains successful because of the honesty and integrity of the participants and by their carefully adhering to the directions. Look at it this way. If you are of integrity, the program will continue and the money that so many others have received will come your way.
NOTE:
You may want to retain every name and address sent to you, either on a computer or hard copy and keep the notes people send you. This VERIFIES that you are truly providing a service. (Also, it might be a good idea to wrap the $1 bill in dark paper to reduce the risk of mail theft.)
So, as each post is downloaded and the directions carefully followed, six members will be reimbursed for their participation as a List Developer with one dollar each.
Your name will move up the list geometrically so that when your name reaches the #1 position you will be receiving thousands of dollars in CASH!!!

What an opportunity for only $6.00 ($1.00 for each of the first six people listed above)
Send it now, add your own name to the list and you're in business!
---DIRECTIONS ----- FOR HOW TO POST TO NEWSGROUPS----------
Step 1)
You do not need to re-type this entire letter to do your own posting.
Simply put your cursor at the beginning of this letter and drag your cursor to the bottom of this document, and select 'copy' from the edit menu. This will copy
the entire letter into
the computer's memory.
Step 2)
Open a blank 'notepad' file and place your cursor at the top of the blank page. From the
'edit' menu select 'paste'. This will paste a copy of the letter into notepad so that you can add your name to the list. Step 3) Save your new notepad file as a .txt file. If you want to do your postings in different settings, you'll always have this file to go back to.
Step 4)
Use Netscape or Internet explorer and try searching for various newsgroups (on-line
forums, message boards, chat sites, discussions.)
Step 5)
Visit these message boards and post this article as a new message by highlighting the text
OF this letter and selecting paste from the edit menu. Fill in the Subject, this will be the header that everyone sees as they scroll through the list of postings
in a particular group,
click the post message button. You're done with your first one!
Congratulations...THAT'S IT!
All you have to do is jump to different newsgroups and post away, after you get the hang
of it, it will take about 30 seconds for each newsgroup!
REMEMBER, THE MORE NEWSGROUPS YOU POST IN, THE MORE MONEY
YOU WILL MAKE!! BUT YOU HAVE TO POST A MINIMUM OF 200
That's it! You will begin receiving money from around the world within days! You may eventually want to rent a P.O.Box due to the large amount of mail you will receive. If you wish to stay anonymous, you can invent a name to use, as long as the postman will deliver
it.
JUST MAKE SURE ALL THE ADDRESSES ARE CORRECT.
Now the WHY part:
Out of 200 postings, say I receive only 5 replies (a very low example).
So then I made
$5.00 with my name at #6 on the letter.

Now, each of the 5 persons who just sent me $1.00 make the MINIMUM 200 postings, each with my name at #5 and only 5 persons respond to each of the original 5, that is another $25.00 for me, now those 25 each make 200 MINIMUM posts with my name at
#4 and only 5 replies each, I will bring in an additional $125.00!
Now, those 125 persons turn around and post the MINIMUM 200 with my name at #3
and only receive 5 replies each, I will make an additional $626.00!
OK, now here is the fun part, each of those 625 persons post a MINIMUM 200 letters with my name at #2 and they each only receive 5 replies, that just made me $3,125.00!!!
Those 3,125 persons will all deliver this message to 200 newsgroups with my name at #1
and if still ONLY 5 persons per 200 newsgroups react I will receive $15,625,00!
With an original investment of only $6.00! AMAZING! When your name is no longer on the list, you just take the latest posting in the newsgroups, and send out another $6.00 to names on the list, putting your name at number 6 again. And start posting again.
The thing to remember is: do you realize that thousands of people all over the world are joining the internet and reading these articles everyday?, JUST LIKE YOU are now!!
So, can you afford $6.00 and see if it really works?? I think so...
People have said, "what if the plan is played out and no one sends you the money? So what! What are the chances of that happening when there are tons of new honest users and new honest people who are joining the internet and newsgroups everyday and are willing to give it a try?
Estimates are at 20,000 to 50,000 new users, every day, with thousands of those joining the actual internet.
REMEMBER, PLAY FAIRLY AND HONESTLY AND

more money you make!
This is perfectly legal! If you have any doubts, refer to Title 18 Sec. 1302 & 1341 of the Postal lottery laws. Keep a copy of these steps for yourself and, whenever you need money, you can use it again, and again.
PLEASE REMEMBER that this program remains successful because of the honesty and integrity of the participants and by their carefully adhering to the directions. Look at it this way. If you are of integrity, the program will continue and the money that so many others have received will come your way.
NOTE:
You may want to retain every name and address sent to you, either on a computer or hard copy and keep the notes people send you. This VERIFIES that you are truly providing a service. (Also, it might be a good idea to wrap the $1 bill in dark paper to reduce the risk
of mail theft.)
So, as each post is downloaded and the directions carefully followed, six members will be reimbursed for their participation as a List Developer with one dollar each.
Your name will move up the list geometrically so that when your name reaches the #1
position you will be receiving thousands of dollars in CASH!!!

What an opportunity for only $6.00 ($1.00 for each of the first six people listed above)
Send it now, add your own name to the list and you're in business!
---DIRECTIONS ----- FOR HOW TO POST TO NEWSGROUPS----------
Step 1)
You do not need to re-type this entire letter to do your own posting.
Simply put your cursor at the beginning of this letter and drag your cursor to the bottom
of this document, and select 'copy' from the edit menu. This will copy
the entire letter into
the computer's memory.
Step 2)
Open a blank 'notepad' file and place your cursor at the top of the blank page. From the
'edit' menu select 'paste'. This will paste a copy of the letter into notepad so that you can add your name to the list. Step 3) Save your new notepad file as a .txt file. If you want to do your postings in different settings, you'll always have this file to go back to.
Step 4)
Use Netscape or Internet explorer and try searching for various
newsgroups (on-line
forums, message boards, chat sites, discussions.)
Step 5)
Visit these message boards and post this article as a new message by highlighting the text
OF this letter and selecting paste from the edit menu. Fill in the Subject, this will be the
header that everyone sees as they scroll through the list of postings
in a particular group,
click the post message button. You're done with your first one!
Congratulations...THAT'S IT!
All you have to do is jump to different newsgroups and post away, after
you get the hang
of it, it will take about 30 seconds for each newsgroup!
REMEMBER, THE MORE NEWSGROUPS YOU POST IN, THE MORE MONEY
YOU WILL MAKE!! BUT YOU HAVE TO POST A MINIMUM OF 200
That's it! You will begin receiving money from around the world within days! You may eventually want to rent a P.O.Box due to the large amount of mail you will receive. If you wish to stay anonymous, you can invent a name to use, as long as the postman will deliver
it.
JUST MAKE SURE ALL THE ADDRESSES ARE CORRECT.
Now the WHY part:
Out of 200 postings, say I receive only 5 replies (a very low example).
So then I made
$5.00 with my name at #6 on the letter.

Now, each of the 5 persons who just sent me $1.00 make the MINIMUM 200 postings, each with my name at #5 and only 5 persons respond to each of the original 5, that is another $25.00 for me, now those 25 each make 200 MINIMUM posts with my name at
#4 and only 5 replies each, I will bring in an additional $125.00!
Now, those 125 persons turn around and post the MINIMUM 200 with my name at #3
and only receive 5 replies each, I will make an additional $626.00!
OK, now here is the fun part, each of those 625 persons post a MINIMUM 200 letters
with my name at #2 and they each only receive 5 replies, that just made me $3,125.00!!!
Those 3,125 persons will all deliver this message to 200 newsgroups with my name at #1
and if still ONLY 5 persons per 200 newsgroups react I will receive $15,625,00!
With an original investment of only $6.00! AMAZING! When your name is no longer on the list, you just take the latest posting in the newsgroups, and send out another $6.00 to names on the list, putting your name at number 6 again. And start posting again.
The thing to remember is: do you realize that thousands of people all over the world are joining the internet and reading these articles everyday?, JUST LIKE YOU are now!!
So, can you afford $6.00 and see if it really works?? I think so...
People have said, "what if the plan is played out and no one sends you the money? So what! What are the chances of that happening when there are tons of new honest users and new honest people who are joining the internet and newsgroups everyday and are willing to give it a try?
Estimates are at 20,000 to 50,000 new users, every day, with thousands of those joining
the actual internet.
REMEMBER, PLAY FAIRLY AND HONESTLY AND

MAKE ALOT OF MONEY!!! NOT A SCAM
PLZ READ

Posted By: David
Date: Saturday, 24 April 2005

"Hi, I'm 23 and I make more money than my parents and so can you"
Turn $6.00 into $60,000...read this to find out how!!!
READING THIS COULD CHANGE YOUR LIFE!
I found this on a bulletin board like this one and decided to try it.
A little while back, I was browsing through a newsgroups, just like you are now, and came across an article similar to this that said you could make thousands of dollars within weeks
with only an initial investment of $6.00! So I thought, "Yeah right, this must be a scam", but like most of us, I was curious, so I kept reading.
Anyway, it said that you need to send $1.00 to each of the 6 names and address stated in
the article.
You then place your own name and address in the bottom of the list at #6, and post the article in at least 200 newsgroups. (There are millions) No catch, that was it.
So after thinking it over, and talking to a few people first, I thought about trying it. I figured: "what have I got to lose except 6 stamps and $6.00, right?"
Then I invested the measly $6.00. Well GUESS WHAT!!... within 7 days, I started getting money in the mail! I was shocked! I figured it would end soon, but the money just kept coming in.
In my first week, I made about $25.00. By the end of the second week I had made a total of over $1,000.00! In the third week I had over $10,000.00 and it's still growing.
This is now my fourth week and I have made just over $42,000.00 and it's still coming in rapidly. It's certainly worth $6.00, and 6 stamps, I have spent more than that on the lottery!!
Let me tell you how this works and most importantly, why it works....
Also, make sure you print a copy of this article NOW, so you can get the information off of it as you need

it.
I promise you that if you follow the directions exactly, that you will start making more money than you thought possible by doing something so easy!
Suggestion:
Read this entire message carefully! (print it out or download it.)
Follow the simple directions and watch the money come in! It's easy. It's legal. And, your investment is only $6.00 (Plus postage)
IMPORTANT:
This is not a rip-off; it is not indecent; it is not illegal; and it is virtually no risk - it really works!!!! If all of the following instructions are adhered to, you will receive extraordinary dividends.
PLEASE NOTE:
Please follow these directions EXACTLY, and $50,000 or more can be yours in 20 to 60
days.
This program remains successful because of the honesty and integrity of the participants.
Please continue it's success by carefully adhering to the instructions.
You will now become part of the Mail Order business. In this business your product is not solid and tangible, it's a service. You are in the business of developing Mailing Lists.
Many large corporations are happy to pay big bucks for quality lists. However, the money
made from the mailing lists is secondary to the income which is made from people like you and me asking to be included in that list.

Here are the 4 easy steps to success:
STEP 1:
Get 6 separate pieces of paper and write the following on each piece of paper "PLEASE
PUT ME ON YOUR MAILING LIST."
Now get 6 US $1.00 bills and place ONE inside EACH of the 6 pieces of paper so the bill will not be seen through the envelope (to prevent thievery).
Next, place one paper in each of the 6 envelopes and seal them. You should now have 6
sealed envelopes, each with a piece of paper stating the phrase "PLEASE PUT ME ON YOUR MAILING LIST.", your name and address, and a $1.00 bill. What you are doing is creating a service. THIS IS ABSOLUTELY LEGAL! You are requesting a legitimate service and you are paying for it!

Like most of us I was a little skeptical and a little worried about the legal aspects of it all.
So I checked it out with the U.S. Post Office (1-800-725-2161) and they confirmed that it is indeed legal! Mail the 6 envelopes to the following addresses:

#1)S.R. Johnson : 3285 Lewis Ave. : Signal Hill, CA 90807
#2)B. Hooper : 3 Warringah Gve. : Petrie, QLD, Australia 4502
#3)Matthew Speight : 6 Charnwood Ave. : Belfast : N. Ireland : BT15 5DH
#4)Andrew Hunter . 7520-1 South Aragon Blvd . Sunrise, FL 33313
#6)D.Crosby . 80 Fulling Mill Lane: Fairfield, CT. 06824

STEP 2: Now take the #1 name off the list that you see above, move the other names up
(6 becomes 5, 5 becomes 4, etc...) and add YOUR Name as number 6 on the list.
STEP 3: Change anything you need to, but try to keep this article as close to original as possible. Now, post your amended article to at least 200 newsgroups. (I think there are close to 2.4million groups) All you need is 200, but remember, the more you post, the
more money you make!
This is perfectly legal! If you have any doubts, refer to Title 18 Sec. 1302 & 1341 of the Postal lottery laws. Keep a copy of these steps for yourself and, whenever you need money, you can use it again, and again.

IMPORTANT:
This is not a rip-off; it is not indecent; it is not illegal; and it is virtually no risk - it really works!!!! If all of the following instructions are adhered to, you will receive extraordinary dividends.
PLEASE NOTE:
Please follow these directions EXACTLY, and $50,000 or more can be yours in 20 to 60
days.
This program remains successful because of the honesty and integrity of the participants.
Please continue it's success by carefully adhering to the instructions.
You will now become part of the Mail Order business. In this business your product is not solid and tangible, it's a service. You are in the business of developing Mailing Lists.
Many large corporations are happy to pay big bucks for quality lists. However, the money
made from the mailing lists is secondary to the income which is made from people like you and me asking to be included in that list.

Here are the 4 easy steps to success:
STEP 1:
Get 6 separate pieces of paper and write the following on each piece of paper "PLEASE
PUT ME ON YOUR MAILING LIST."
Now get 6 US $1.00 bills and place ONE inside EACH of the 6 pieces of paper so the bill will not be seen through the envelope (to prevent thievery).
Next, place one paper in each of the 6 envelopes and seal them. You should now have 6
sealed envelopes, each with a piece of paper stating the phrase "PLEASE PUT ME ON YOUR MAILING LIST.", your name and address, and a $1.00 bill. What you are doing is creating a service. THIS IS ABSOLUTELY LEGAL! You are requesting a legitimate service and you are paying for it!

Like most of us I was a little skeptical and a little worried about the legal aspects of it all.
So I checked it out with the U.S. Post Office (1-800-725-2161) and they confirmed that it is indeed legal! Mail the 6 envelopes to the following addresses:

#1)S.R. Johnson : 3285 Lewis Ave. : Signal Hill, CA 90807
#2)B. Hooper : 3 Warringah Gve. : Petrie, QLD, Australia 4502
#3)Matthew Speight : 6 Charnwood Ave. : Belfast : N. Ireland : BT15 5DH
#4)Andrew Hunter . 7520-1 South Aragon Blvd . Sunrise, FL 33313
#6)D.Crosby . 80 Fulling Mill Lane: Fairfield, CT. 06824

STEP 2: Now take the #1 name off the list that you see above, move the other names up
(6 becomes 5, 5 becomes 4, etc...) and add YOUR Name as number 6 on the list.
STEP 3: Change anything you need to, but try to keep this article as close to original as possible. Now, post your amended article to at least 200 newsgroups. (I think there are close to 2.4million groups) All you need is 200, but remember, the more you post, the
more money you make!
This is perfectly legal! If you have any doubts, refer to Title 18 Sec. 1302 & 1341 of the Postal lottery laws. Keep a copy of these steps for yourself and, whenever you need money, you can use it again, and again.
PLEASE REMEMBER that this program remains successful because of the honesty and integrity of the participants and by their carefully adhering to the directions. Look at it this way. If you are of integrity, the program will continue and the money that so many others have received will come your way.
NOTE:
You may want to retain every name and address sent to you, either on a computer or hard copy and keep the notes people send you. This VERIFIES that you are truly providing a service. (Also, it might be a good idea to wrap the $1 bill in dark paper to reduce the risk
of mail theft.)
So, as each post is downloaded and the directions carefully followed, six members will be reimbursed for their participation as a List Developer with one dollar each.
Your name will move up the list geometrically so that when your name reaches the #1
position you will be receiving thousands of dollars in CASH!!!

What an opportunity for only $6.00 ($1.00 for each of the first six people listed above)
Send it now, add your own name to the list and you're in business!
---DIRECTIONS ----- FOR HOW TO POST TO NEWSGROUPS----------
Step 1)
You do not need to re-type this entire letter to do your own posting.
Simply put your cursor at the beginning of this letter and drag your cursor to the bottom
of this document, and select 'copy' from the edit menu. This will copy
the entire letter into
the computer's memory.
Step 2)
Open a blank 'notepad' file and place your cursor at the top of the blank page. From the
'edit' menu select 'paste'. This will paste a copy of the letter into notepad so that you can add your name to the list. Step 3) Save your new notepad file as a .txt file. If you want to do your postings in different settings, you'll always have this file to go back to.
Step 4)
Use Netscape or Internet explorer and try searching for various
newsgroups (on-line
forums, message boards, chat sites, discussions.)
Step 5)
Visit these message boards and post this article as a new message by highlighting the text
OF this letter and selecting paste from the edit menu. Fill in the Subject, this will be the
header that everyone sees as they scroll through the list of postings
in a particular group,
click the post message button. You're done with your first one!
Congratulations...THAT'S IT!
All you have to do is jump to different newsgroups and post away, after
you get the hang
of it, it will take about 30 seconds for each newsgroup!
REMEMBER, THE MORE NEWSGROUPS YOU POST IN, THE MORE MONEY
YOU WILL MAKE!! BUT YOU HAVE TO POST A MINIMUM OF 200
That's it! You will begin receiving money from around the world within days! You may eventually want to rent a P.O.Box due to the large amount of mail you will receive. If you wish to stay anonymous, you can invent a name to use, as long as the postman will deliver
it.
JUST MAKE SURE ALL THE ADDRESSES ARE CORRECT.
Now the WHY part:
Out of 200 postings, say I receive only 5 replies (a very low example).
So then I made
$5.00 with my name at #6 on the letter.

Now, each of the 5 persons who just sent me $1.00 make the MINIMUM 200 postings, each with my name at #5 and only 5 persons respond to each of the original 5, that is another $25.00 for me, now those 25 each make 200 MINIMUM posts with my name at
#4 and only 5 replies each, I will bring in an additional $125.00!
Now, those 125 persons turn around and post the MINIMUM 200 with my name at #3
and only receive 5 replies each, I will make an additional $626.00!
OK, now here is the fun part, each of those 625 persons post a MINIMUM 200 letters
with my name at #2 and they each only receive 5 replies, that just made me $3,125.00!!!
Those 3,125 persons will all deliver this message to 200 newsgroups with my name at #1
and if still ONLY 5 persons per 200 newsgroups react I will receive $15,625,00!
With an original investment of only $6.00! AMAZING! When your name is no longer on the list, you just take the latest posting in the newsgroups, and send out another $6.00 to names on the list, putting your name at number 6 again. And start posting again.
The thing to remember is: do you realize that thousands of people all over the world are joining the internet and reading these articles everyday?, JUST LIKE YOU are now!!
So, can you afford $6.00 and see if it really works?? I think so...
People have said, "what if the plan is played out and no one sends you the money? So what! What are the chances of that happening when there are tons of new honest users and new honest people who are joining the internet and newsgroups everyday and are willing to give it a try?
Estimates are at 20,000 to 50,000 new users, every day, with thousands of those joining
the actual internet.
REMEMBER, PLAY FAIRLY AND HONESTLY AND

MAKE ALOT OF MONEY!!! NOT A SCAM

Date: Saturday, 24 April 2005

"Hi, I'm 23 and I make more money than my parents and so can you"
Turn $6.00 into $60,000...read this to find out how!!!
READING THIS COULD CHANGE YOUR LIFE!
I found this on a bulletin board like this one and decided to try it.
A little while back, I was browsing through a newsgroups, just like you are now, and came across an article similar to this that said you could make thousands of dollars within weeks
with only an initial investment of $6.00! So I thought, "Yeah right, this must be a scam", but like most of us, I was curious, so I kept reading.
Anyway, it said that you need to send $1.00 to each of the 6 names and address stated in
the article.
You then place your own name and address in the bottom of the list at #6, and post the article in at least 200 newsgroups. (There are millions) No catch, that was it.
So after thinking it over, and talking to a few people first, I thought about trying it. I figured: "what have I got to lose except 6 stamps and $6.00, right?"
Then I invested the measly $6.00. Well GUESS WHAT!!... within 7 days, I started getting money in the mail! I was shocked! I figured it would end soon, but the money just kept coming in.
In my first week, I made about $25.00. By the end of the second week I had made a total of over $1,000.00! In the third week I had over $10,000.00 and it's still growing.
This is now my fourth week and I have made just over $42,000.00 and it's still coming in rapidly. It's certainly worth $6.00, and 6 stamps, I have spent more than that on the lottery!!
Let me tell you how this works and most importantly, why it works....
Also, make sure you print a copy of this article NOW, so you can get the information off of it as you need

it.
I promise you that if you follow the directions exactly, that you will start making more money than you thought possible by doing something so easy!
Suggestion:
Read this entire message carefully! (print it out or download it.)
Follow the simple directions and watch the money come in! It's easy. It's legal. And, your investment is only $6.00 (Plus postage)
IMPORTANT:
This is not a rip-off; it is not indecent; it is not illegal; and it is virtually no risk - it really

MAKE ALOT OF MONEY!!! NOT A SCAM
PLZ READ

Posted By: David
Date: Saturday, 24 April 2005

"Hi, I'm 23 and I make more money than my parents and so can you"
Turn $6.00 into $60,000...read this to find out how!!!
READING THIS COULD CHANGE YOUR LIFE!
I found this on a bulletin board like this one and decided to try it.
A little while back, I was browsing through a newsgroups, just like you are now, and came across an article similar to this that said you could make thousands of dollars within weeks
with only an initial investment of $6.00! So I thought, "Yeah right, this must be a scam", but like most of us, I was curious, so I kept reading.
Anyway, it said that you need to send $1.00 to each of the 6 names and address stated in
the article.
You then place your own name and address in the bottom of the list at #6, and post the article in at least 200 newsgroups. (There are millions) No catch, that was it.
So after thinking it over, and talking to a few people first, I thought about trying it. I figured: "what have I got to lose except 6 stamps and $6.00, right?"
Then I invested the measly $6.00. Well GUESS WHAT!!... within 7 days, I started getting money in the mail! I was shocked! I figured it would end soon, but the money just kept coming in.
In my first week, I made about $25.00. By the end of the second week I had made a total of over $1,000.00! In the third week I had over $10,000.00 and it's still growing.
This is now my fourth week and I have made just over $42,000.00 and it's still coming in rapidly. It's certainly worth $6.00, and 6 stamps, I have spent more than that on the lottery!!
Let me tell you how this works and most importantly, why it works....
Also, make sure you print a copy of this article NOW, so you can get the information off of it as you need

it.
I promise you that if you follow the directions exactly, that you will start making more money than you thought possible by doing something so easy!
Suggestion:
Read this entire message carefully! (print it out or download it.)
Follow the simple directions and watch the money come in! It's easy. It's legal. And, your investment is only $6.00 (Plus postage)
IMPORTANT:
This is not a rip-off; it is not indecent; it is not illegal; and it is virtually no risk - it really works!!!! If all of the following instructions are adhered to, you will receive extraordinary dividends.
PLEASE NOTE:
Please follow these directions EXACTLY, and $50,000 or more can be yours in 20 to 60
days.
This program remains successful because of the honesty and integrity of the participants.
Please continue it's success by carefully adhering to the instructions.
You will now become part of the Mail Order business. In this business your product is not solid and tangible, it's a service. You are in the business of developing Mailing Lists.
Many large corporations are happy to pay big bucks for quality lists. However, the money
made from the mailing lists is secondary to the income which is made from people like you and me asking to be included in that list.

Here are the 4 easy steps to success:
STEP 1:
Get 6 separate pieces of paper and write the following on each piece of paper "PLEASE
PUT ME ON YOUR MAILING LIST."
Now get 6 US $1.00 bills and place ONE inside EACH of the 6 pieces of paper so the bill will not be seen through the envelope (to prevent thievery).
Next, place one paper in each of the 6 envelopes and seal them. You should now have 6
sealed envelopes, each with a piece of paper stating the phrase "PLEASE PUT ME ON YOUR MAILING LIST.", your name and address, and a $1.00 bill. What you are doing is creating a service. THIS IS ABSOLUTELY LEGAL! You are requesting a legitimate service and you are paying for it!

Like most of us I was a little skeptical and a little worried about the legal aspects of it all.
So I checked it out with the U.S. Post Office (1-800-725-2161) and they confirmed that it is indeed legal! Mail the 6 envelopes to the following addresses:

#1)S.R. Johnson : 3285 Lewis Ave. : Signal Hill, CA 90807
#2)B. Hooper : 3 Warringah Gve. : Petrie, QLD, Australia 4502
#3)Matthew Speight : 6 Charnwood Ave. : Belfast : N. Ireland : BT15 5DH
#4)Andrew Hunter . 7520-1 South Aragon Blvd . Sunrise, FL 33313
#6)D.Crosby . 80 Fulling Mill Lane: Fairfield, CT. 06824

STEP 2: Now take the #1 name off the list that you see above, move the other names up
(6 becomes 5, 5 becomes 4, etc...) and add YOUR Name as number 6 on the list.
STEP 3: Change anything you need to, but try to keep this article as close to original as possible. Now, post your amended article to at least 200 newsgroups. (I think there are close to 2.4million groups) All you need is 200, but remember, the more you post, the
more money you make!
This is perfectly legal! If you have any doubts, refer to Title 18 Sec. 1302 & 1341 of the Postal lottery laws. Keep a copy of these steps for yourself and, whenever you need money, you can use it again, and again.
PLEASE REMEMBER that this program remains successful because of the honesty and integrity of the participants and by their carefully adhering to the directions. Look at it this way. If you are of integrity, the program will continue and the money that so many others have received will come your way.
NOTE:
You may want to retain every name and address sent to you, either on a computer or hard copy and keep the notes people send you. This VERIFIES that you are truly providing a service. (Also, it might be a good idea to wrap the $1 bill in dark paper to reduce the risk of mail theft.)
So, as each post is downloaded and the directions carefully followed, six members will be reimbursed for their participation as a List Developer with one dollar each.
Your name will move up the list geometrically so that when your name reaches the #1
position you will be receiving thousands of dollars in CASH!!!

What an opportunity for only $6.00 ($1.00 for each of the first six people listed above)
Send it now, add your own name to the list and you're in business!
---DIRECTIONS ----- FOR HOW TO POST TO NEWSGROUPS----------
Step 1)
You do not need to re-type this entire letter to do your own posting.
Simply put your cursor at the beginning of this letter and drag your cursor to the bottom
of this document, and select 'copy' from the edit menu. This will copy
the entire letter into
the computer's memory.
Step 2)
Open a blank 'notepad' file and place your cursor at the top of the blank page. From the
'edit' menu select 'paste'. This will paste a copy of the letter into notepad so that you can add your name to the list. Step 3) Save your new notepad file as a .txt file. If you want to do your postings in different settings, you'll always have this file to go back to.
Step 4)
Use Netscape or Internet explorer and try searching for various
newsgroups (on-line
forums, message boards, chat sites, discussions.)
Step 5)
Visit these message boards and post this article as a new message by highlighting the text
OF this letter and selecting paste from the edit menu. Fill in the Subject, this will be the
header that everyone sees as they scroll through the list of postings
in a particular group,
click the post message button. You're done with your first one!
Congratulations...THAT'S IT!
All you have to do is jump to different newsgroups and post away, after
you get the hang
of it, it will take about 30 seconds for each newsgroup!
REMEMBER, THE MORE NEWSGROUPS YOU POST IN, THE MORE MONEY
YOU WILL MAKE!! BUT YOU HAVE TO POST A MINIMUM OF 200
That's it! You will begin receiving money from around the world within days! You may eventually want to rent a P.O.Box due to the large amount of mail you will receive. If you wish to stay anonymous, you can invent a name to use, as long as the postman will deliver
it.
JUST MAKE SURE ALL THE ADDRESSES ARE CORRECT.
Now the WHY part:
Out of 200 postings, say I receive only 5 replies (a very low example).
So then I made
$5.00 with my name at #6 on the letter.

Now, each of the 5 persons who just sent me $1.00 make the MINIMUM 200 postings, each with my name at #5 and only 5 persons respond to each of the original 5, that is another $25.00 for me, now those 25 each make 200 MINIMUM posts with my name at
#4 and only 5 replies each, I will bring in an additional $125.00!
Now, those 125 persons turn around and post the MINIMUM 200 with my name at #3
and only receive 5 replies each, I will make an additional $626.00!
OK, now here is the fun part, each of those 625 persons post a MINIMUM 200 letters with my name at #2 and they each only receive 5 replies, that just made me $3,125.00!!!
Those 3,125 persons will all deliver this message to 200 newsgroups with my name at #1
and if still ONLY 5 persons per 200 newsgroups react I will receive $15,625,00!
With an original investment of only $6.00! AMAZING! When your name is no longer on the list, you just take the latest posting in the newsgroups, and send out another $6.00 to names on the list, putting your name at number 6 again. And start posting again.
The thing to remember is: do you realize that thousands of people all over the world are joining the internet and reading these articles everyday?, JUST LIKE YOU are now!!
So, can you afford $6.00 and see if it really works?? I think so...
People have said, "what if the plan is played out and no one sends you the money? So what! What are the chances of that happening when there are tons of new honest users and new honest people who are joining the internet and newsgroups everyday and are willing to give it a try?
Estimates are at 20,000 to 50,000 new users, every day, with thousands of those joining
the actual internet.
REMEMBER, PLAY FAIRLY AND HONESTLY AND
THIS WILL WORK FOR YOU!!!

He's an idiot. He calls him a stalker, and he threatened to do the same to me, only I didn't dare him to. He chose my of all the people here.

You read every word, you lying dogfart...you said you archive it all. We control even your computer. You have to read it all, you have a masochistic desire to be stimulated by us, all based on your unrequited love for male ham operators. Caught in another lie, wristflipper. Why don't you make some more threats, wristflipper? Come on, we'd love to see what you aren't gonna do. Lol!

You remind us all of Stan's dog on South Park. "Sit"...he sits..."Fetch"...he fetches..."Now, DON'T be gay!"

It's so funny to see you whine and lie. Why won't you tell the AKC where you are camping, little snow queen? Uhl be doing something you have never done before, and Uhl like it, wristflipper.

TTYL, wristflipper.

Follow these easy steps:

1) Sign up and register here:http://netbux.org/?r=87559
2) Login and begin searching on Google or your prefered search engine!
3) Do this everyday and tell your friends to make even more money!

Do the same steps for pay-pup
http://pay-pup.com/?r=42891
Enter 42891 In the referer box if not already there

Note: Netbux works same way but you can earn 80 cents a day insted of $1.00
How Pay-Pup Works
At Pay-Pup, we pay our members to search the internet. There are no strings or gimmicks. You simply register with Pay-Pup and you earn money instantly from your very first search. You will earn $0.02 for every search you make for up to 50 paid searches per day, therefore the maximum pay per day for your individual searching is $1.00. Note: A paid search is one that is unique to your other searches, meaning that you will not get paid for searching the same thing twice.

To make things even better, you will also earn $0.02 for every search that your referrals make for up to 50 searches a day as well! Therefore the maximum pay per day for each referral is $1.00. The more referrals, the more money! Upon registration, you will be given a unique referral url (also located in your 'stats' area) that you can give out to your friends, post it on your website, blog, etc. We also have some images that you can use to help advertise online with.

An amazing feature with the referral program is that if someone comes here by way of your referral url, their ip address is recorded and attached to your account so if they close the browser, disconnect (only static ip's), turn off their computer (only static ip's), you will still get credit if they ever return! You only get paid for one level of referrals but you may already see an enormous earning opportunity here.

There really isn't much to it. You search the net and you earn money. You refer your friends and you'll earn even more money. Your member statistics are updated instantly so you can always stay on top of your earned monies, referrals, searches, etc. We pay you at the beginning of every month via PayPal once you have reached $50 or more.

This is no SPAM, it actually works. I made over 10$ in the the first 2 days!

BTW when you sign up for Pay-Pup, set your homepage to http://pay-pup.com/index.php so that your homepage becomes one line, w/o the adverisements, but you still get paid for your searches! (No one knows this but me)

>He's just sore that I asked him about his neighbors. :)

Looks like the Imax is going up today. I went in the tree 25 feet, but was shaking because the damn thing wasn't perfectly straight. I cut all the limb to about 35 feet. I purchased a 30 foot telescoping mast from Lowe's, and will bolt it to the side of the tree. I will be about about 36 feet. Will report back tonight.

We sort of wove the mast in the top of the tree, in the branches. Then used stainless steel straps so that as the tree grows, the antenna itself will become part of the tree.

Most all copper wire on the market is soft draw and will break after a few years of constant tension. Hard draw copper wire is very tough and robust.
I use 18g lamp safety wire. This is the thin copper wire that servers as a safety ground and as a safety wire in case a link in the lamp chain breaks in hanging chandeliers.

I have 50' of thin braided copper wire from Home Depot that's been under constant tension for 6 years 9 months. Enough tension to deflect the top of a 20' support (two fence rails, a spike base and a building clamp at 9') 2 to 3 inches.

Yep, got ground rods, but suffered a minor setback. I bottom part of the antenna sound like something was rattling on the inside. I measured the resistance from the center conductor to the ground it was a dead short. I thought this should be open.

Oops. I missed this one.

Nope, not having a bad day at all. Somebodies gotta call these braindead fools on their crap at least once in a while. I know it'd be easier if I just plonked 'em. I have plonked one guy in all my years of usenet. That was because he was a rascist ass who spouted the most rediculous crap I'd ever heard. It was crazy-shit. Made the "Turner Diaries" read like "Little Red Ridinghood".

These guys are just petty little liars that are easily discounted. Just a little exercise. ;-)

Would be a real deal if you would keep the cheap STEEL plastic coated wire and just offer the insulators alone.....I like the wire ties you have on the wire....made for tying reinforcment steel in concrete.....so is the cheap antenna wire you offer with the insulators.

a BAAAAAAAD deal!

There should also be a separate section for broadcast (MW and FM) radio rather than limping it all in with Shortwave.

Rattling is normal, from what I hear. The dead short is normal too. I think it's the 1/4 wave that shows open. I am getting them confused. Anayway, the antenna is not up yet, but the mast and mounts are up. I want to make a dry run so it's straight. Now, it's a matter of attaching the antenna.

I had the Bronco cleaned and ready to go. They had forecast rain by late afternoon, it hit early in the morning.

You made physical threats, and you got proven to be a BS artist. You won't give your info out about camping in Dayton cus you are scared of the AKC, even when they said all they wanted to do was introduce themselves.

Threaten some more, sissy. Tell us how bad you are some more, sissy...Oh, sorry...we forgot...MEN do that. T/S wimps like you just hide.

Like the stainless steel messenger wire used in figure-8 CATV drops?
It has a plastic jacket and is made to support more than its own weight for years. 100 foot drops of RG59 or RG6 are common and the messenger wire will peel away from the coax. I had several thousand feet of it, but my retired dad found my stash and has used all of it for his yard and garden projects. The only bad thing is trying to solder to it, but a clamp and N0-OX will take care of that.

Can someone give me a ball park figure on what a Cobra 138XLR in decent shape with original hand mike, manuals and maybe even the original box - would be worth? A local widow who used it, is selling out. I'm trying to find out how much she should be able to expect for it.

Thanks,

I've been out of CBs for a while as to buying/selling - can't even remember all the makes and models as I once was able to. I looked up the 138 XLR on E-Bay of which there are two of. This lady's radio is a "BASE" radio, not mobile. Maybe the 139???? She said it was a Cobra XLR 40 channel side-band set. "I" didn't see the radio - she called me on the phone about it - also suggested a 138. Due to age, probably got a number wrong. It is boxed up from what she had said. Sorry for confusion.

Cobra 138XLR if I recall correctly used the 858 chip. Easy to modify but has to be at least twenty-five years old from my estimation. I wouldn't pay more than $25-$30.

Flip that wrist, flip that wrist
Flip that wrist so limp
mopey is a keyclown boy
With the IQ of a chimp

You have to understand the motivation behind Mopathetic's visits. Keyclowns are desperate people...they do not have the mental faculties to tolerate being bugged about their keyclownism. It makes them upset because they have to hear dissent. Mopathetic is the poster child for this attitude. He simply cannot take it when somebody gives him crap about being a keyclown.

This atttude has no doubt been developed by a lifetime of crying and whining to get his way. It started in his childhood, when he whined and cried in supermarkets and malls to get candy or toys. When his parents indulged him in these situations it reinforced the idea in his young mind that if he yelled and cried to get his way that he should always get it.

As he became a young adult and found that life had to be met on life's terms, not his, he railed at the injustice of it all. Teen years immediately before this stage found him in a constant state of barely controlled rage and often acting out in his frustration. Typical of such incidents are punching people who cut him off in traffic, yelling obscenities out car windows, and showing no consideration for others.

Such is the mentality of a keyclown. RF spectrum, to a keyclown, is nothing more than a wide open space to play in. If this were a private yard or a public place belonging to all taxpayers, the evidence of keyclownism would be obvious. The place would be uncaringly trashed with garbage and the observed attitude would be "So what if it is a mess, you wanna MAKE me clean up after myself, sucker?"

The visits to peoples' homes are an expression of this frustrated, thwarted, angry personality. Mopathetic tries to make someone conform to his ideas of what should be in the NG by making threats and visits. To Mopathetic, the worst thing on earth would be if the AKC knows his address, and his logic is that him knowing AKC addresses should strike fear in their hearts. You see, when he visits with his 12 gauge digicam the AKC should shake. They do...with laughter.

The fact that Mopathetic shows himself to be a disturbed individual in these visits does not dawn on him. This is because he is not inhabited with the normal sense of right and wrong. His opinion, like that of all keyclowns, is that whatever he wants to do is OK, and if someone disagrees then he has the right to attack them, physically or otherwise. This affliction is commonly called a sociopathic disorder.

The very fact of posting this message will bring a barrage of name calling, threats, and other things that keyclowns believe are effective. They think they are effective because they are effective at riling THEM up. This attitude is consistant with keyclownism's main root causes: the fact that keyclowns are only aware of what they want and have no concern for others, coupled with a total inability to tolerate even the most basic forms of disagreement.

Mopathetic's reactions to this post will prove the thesis as presented. Keyclowns are simple creatures, and always behave in a predictable manner.

Got a ham here that's blind, won't work, wants everything handed to him, spent his HF radio money on a new computer, canceled his high speed internet because he couldn't afford it (spent his wad on the new computer) and wants someone to give him a record player so he can make his records into CD's.

He's told us on 2 meters, his only band, that he worked once, didn't like it, and won't do it again. He brags about all the stuff the state will get him (didn't pan out!!!). He gets up at 4:30 in the morning just to talk to the folks driving to work. I laugh my ass off when one of the guys brags about the HF contacts he makes while driving.

He won't buy a used HF radio because he bought a used radio once and it had some problems. I've bought broken 2 meter stuff cheap, fixed it and sold it. I picked up a broken IC-2100 and fixed it with a part from a broken HTX-212. I kept the IC-2100.

Maybe you should have a talk with him. Oh yeah, he's one of those hams that bought himself a vanity callsign, too. You two should see each other eye to eye!

He's an atheist that always says, "God bless America" at the end of the old farts net when he's net control, that hypocrite!!!

When compared to a stated db in a ground plane you should get at least 10db better with a 2 element quard. Go to: http://www.signalengineering.com/ultimate/and it will tell you all about it. Have made a 2 element quad on 3/8wave and have talked to Nova Scotia, Hawaii, Australia, New Zealand on a SBE Console II 23 ch am/usb/lsb radio with a std ceramic mic. My design came from a ham operator in No.Ctrl Tx that runs over 2Kw on it and goes wherever he wants, and almost makes his own skip.

But this is the way to go.

Most of those situations employ carrier current transmitters which radiate only a short distance from their "antenna" wires, thereby limiting range beyond the intended service area. The biggest uses for this technique is on college campuses, travel, and road alert systems.

As you know, RF degrades gradually and it is impossible to "brick wall" stop a broadcast at the limits of physical property. But unless you are very close, you will likely not hear a carrier current transmission.

"right".

Not true. You have to be a U.S. citizen, and not convicted of other FCC rule violations.

Instead of arguing with me, try looking into the rules governing each service, and find out for yourself. Despite the relative ease by which a person may operate a CB radio, it is still not a "right" to do so, it is a privilege granted by the FCC, as the service is authorized by rule, even if a license is not required.

Sure. The FCC is not as effective as they should be, and freeload.... er, freebanders get away with trespassing on other government administered frequencies with little chance of getting caught. But that doesn't mean that it's legal or proper.

Your anti-God bias is showing. You would rather believe that the complexity of our ecosystem occurred due to just the right random, combinations of factors and events to produce all the diversified species, which all have a key part to play in the total picture, rather than consider the likelihood that an intelligent force was somehow responsible for guiding it.

But what motivates natural evolution? Who decides whether a mutation is "beneficial" or not? Natural selection, otherwise known as survival of the fittest, assumes that gene mutations which result in a "better" species, would survive while the "lesser' versions of the species would die out. Yet, it is said that homo-sapiens evolved from apes. Why then are apes still around if we are the "new and improved" version of the ape?

Evolution only explains a small part of the puzzle.

Then why are smaller mammals still here? Why are apes still here? Why

It very well might be. It's all part of the bigger plan. Like I said, I totally accept the concepts of evolution. I just believe that the process has been "managed" by a higher order intelligence, the definition of which, has yet to be revealed. I am not advocating any specific religious interpretation of "God", only that one exists.

So, because there might be other factors which may be more

Flip that wrist, flip that wrist
Flip that wrist so limp
mopey is a keyclown boy
With the IQ of a chimp

You have to understand the motivation behind Mopathetic's visits. Keyclowns are desperate people...they do not have the mental faculties to tolerate being bugged about their keyclownism. It makes them upset because they have to hear dissent. Mopathetic is the poster child for this attitude. He simply cannot take it when somebody gives him crap about being a keyclown.

This atttude has no doubt been developed by a lifetime of crying and whining to get his way. It started in his childhood, when he whined and cried in supermarkets and malls to get candy or toys. When his parents indulged him in these situations it reinforced the idea in his young mind that if he yelled and cried to get his way that he should always get it.

As he became a young adult and found that life had to be met on life's terms, not his, he railed at the injustice of it all. Teen years immediately before this stage found him in a constant state of barely controlled rage and often acting out in his frustration. Typical of such incidents are punching people who cut him off in traffic, yelling obscenities out car windows, and showing no consideration for others.

Such is the mentality of a keyclown. RF spectrum, to a keyclown, is nothing more than a wide open space to play in. If this were a private yard or a public place belonging to all taxpayers, the evidence of keyclownism would be obvious. The place would be uncaringly trashed with garbage and the observed attitude would be "So what if it is a mess, you wanna MAKE me clean up after myself, sucker?"

The visits to peoples' homes are an expression of this frustrated, thwarted, angry personality. Mopathetic tries to make someone conform to his ideas of what should be in the NG by making threats and visits. To Mopathetic, the worst thing on earth would be if the AKC knows his address, and his logic is that him knowing AKC addresses should strike fear in their hearts. You see, when he visits with his 12 gauge digicam

the AKC should shake. They do...with laughter.

The fact that Mopathetic shows himself to be a disturbed individual in these visits does not dawn on him. This is because he is not inhabited with the normal sense of right and wrong. His opinion, like that of all keyclowns, is that whatever he wants to do is OK, and if someone disagrees then he has the right to attack them, physically or otherwise. This affliction is commonly called a sociopathic disorder.

The very fact of posting this message will bring a barrage of name calling, threats, and other things that keyclowns believe are effective. They think they are effective because they are effective at riling THEM up. This attitude is consistant with keyclownism's main root causes: the fact that keyclowns are only aware of what they want and have no concern for others, coupled with a total inability to tolerate even the most basic forms of disagreement.

Mopathetic's reactions to this post will prove the thesis as presented.

Keyclowns are simple creatures, and always behave in a predictable manner.

I actually agree with much of what you are about--and you have demonstrated a high understanding and ability to use logic effectively...

I diverge from your thought on "the radio spectrum"...

I am endowed to full use of the radio spectrum by my creator--however, in the interest of public good and organization--I am willing to provide my public servants with a necessary portion of this spectrum so they may carry out business which is beneficial to the citizens of the United States.... and IS the BUSINESS of THE CITIZENS of the UNITED STATES...

I am also open to them providing a section of this spectrum to specialized hobbies and for experimentation... however, the majority of it is mine--to share with my other citizens, since it as much endowed to them by their creator (whether they recognize him/her or not)... the public needs much expanded education programs in the use and exercise of their radio spectrum--that is where gov't should spend their efforts...

control and governing of the citizens flows from the people, to the congress, and back to the people--it does not flow from an elite of group of governing citizens to the people...

.... this simply needs to be straightened out...

Physical trespass can carry a criminal charge..talking on the freeband criminal act vs a civil act. The penalties are not the same.

Nothing like a public park, as breaking the law you speak of (trespass) can result in criminal charges, unlike talking on the freeband. This concept has proved nearly impossible for you to grasp. Perhaps it because you so vehemently disagree with the law.

Being monogamous with your wife/husband/partner has nothing to do with your past. There are instances where the HIV virus is semi-dormant for years and years (10 to 15 year spans are on record) and then it suddenly appears,,,the same can be said of AIDS..it's manageable in many cases until,...poof,,it morphs to full blown AIDS. The ONLY "cure" is found in the prevention..in other words, abstaining from pre-marital sex then both parties getting a thorough CBC (complete blood count) prior to tying the knot.

Copper wire should NEVER be used as your ground because (the reasons you stated, in addition to...) the inductance value is piss poor.
Copper strap is always desirable over wire. FWIW, many people, hammies copper COATED wire. No matter,,, copper wire doesn't compare to copper strap.

Digital Spread has another name when applied to such. Ask an

Now off you go little boy,thanks for playing, next time come back with

Sure it does. You made a reference to the Democrats. Carter is a Democrat, isn't he? Ok, so he doesn't hold an office right now. But how many Democrats currently holding office are athiests? By their own admissions, not many. Your argument is bogus -- I think Jeanine

Since you refuse to read it yourself, here's that clause from First Amendment: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof..." Sounds to me like that is a mandate defining the seperation of church and state. Or are you going to argue that a bird with a flat bill and webbed feet

The same passage I have been referring to all along -- Article VI.
Since you haven't read it, let me quote if for you, and in full:

"All Debts contracted and engagements entered into, before the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution as under the Confederation.

"This Constituion, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

"The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution; but no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States.

You now have no excuse for such stupid questions.

Once again you demonstrate your ignorance by talking of things about which you know little or nothing: An oath on the bible is used in every court but not for every person. There are different oaths for different faiths -- there is even an oath for athiests and agnostics.

You sure did sleep a lot in school. It's clear that you don't understand statistics either. I don't have Excell (well, I have it, I just don't have it installed because I never used it when I did), so I downloaded the equivalent PDF file:

http://www.census.gov/population/socdemo/hh-fam/cps2003/tabA1-all.pdf

This is nothing but a breakdown of marriage -status-, not the marriage and divorce rates. You can't calculate marriage and divorce rates from this data for the simple fact that many people are, or have been, married more than once.

You are also ignoring the fact that the divorce rate says nothing by itself. According to the CDC, during the year 2003 there were 7.5 marriages per thousand people. There were also 3.8 divorces per thousand people. This means (to anyone that can handle 5th grade math) that the divorce rate is half (50.7%) the rate of marriage.

And here's the fun part, Dave: Since half of all marriages end in divorce, and if the majority of citizens are right-wing conservative Christians that hold marriage to be a sacred value, then there sure are a lot of hypocrites that call themselves Christians.

As for the "tradition" of marriage, remember that the filibuster has been an American tradition for almost 200 years. IOW, you are a hypocrite, Dave.

You are trying to build an inductive argument using information that only tells one side of the story (and heavily biased in favor of your conclusion). I merely presented some information that you conveniently overlooked. And it so happens that your premise loses almost all of it's weight when -all- the facts are known.

>> If the foundation of >>your argument is that gay marriage weakens the value of marriage, it's >>both fair and reasonable to compare gay marriage to other factors that

The common denominator is the value of marriage. That alone makes such issues relevant to the discussion and exposes your argument as nothing more than an exercise in bigotry. And that's no different than KKK tactics which use the very same type of lame justifications to defend racism (religion, tradition, morality, etc.).

<snip>
>> Yet you are whining about >>it like a stuck pig while denying those other, much more significant >>factors.

>twisted logic that freebanders use to justify illegal radio pirating.

If what you say were true then CB radio would be all over the news. It isn't. OTOH, opposition to gay marriage -is- all over the news, and that's because of all the attention it's given. If gay marriage is getting all this attention because it threatens the value of marriage then there would be much -greater- attention to the divorce rate (and there would probably be a few right-wing fanatic groups lobbying to outlaw divorce). But, in fact, there -isn't- any political outcry against divorce. The only reasonable conclusion is that these factions of "Christianity" (at least one of which I'm sure you are a member) are hypocrites that are practicing church-sponsored bigotry.

>Bad is bad no matter how large or small it may be.

Well, what's worse, Dave: A couple homos getting married? or a large group of bigots trying to subvert the Constitution under the guise of Christianity?

>>The conclusion is obvious: this has absolutely nothing to do >>with the value of marriage. You simply hate homosexuals.
>Once again, your chain of logic is based on flawed conclusions based >on fallacious logic, and your own internal bias.

When will you get it through your thick Republican head that bias has nothing to do with it, Dave? I'm not homo, I don't have any friends that are homo, I don't like "Queer Eye" or "Will & Grace"..... and personally, I find the homosexual lifestyle somewhat repulsive. But there's nothing in the Constitution that prohibits two gays from getting married if that's how they get their kicks. So it's not my place to judge. And that would be even -more- true if I was a Christian, the doctrine being that you should forgive others of their sins (assuming you see homosexuality as a sin), and that judgment should be left to God.

You hate gays. So do a lot of other people. Big deal. But my "bias" leans towards the Constitution, not my aversion to homosexuality. They have the same rights as me, and I treat them with the same amount of respect that I do anyone else whether I like them or not. That's the difference between tolerance and bigotry. I am tolerant. You are not.

You are a bigot.

There's nothing "random" about it -- when you consider that the bell curve consists of a population as great as the number of events that occur in the Universe within any period of time, it becomes utterly -ridiculous- to think that life requires divine intervention. And if there -is- evidence of guidance by some intelligent force, it's far more likely that this "force" is not God but some sort of ETI. May the

Because you assume that the "'lesser' versions of the species would die out", which is not necessarily the case. There can be many circumstances where a variation doesn't compete for the same resources as it's progenitor. This explains why there are so many speices of birds that have but slight variations -- many birds are migratory. And so are many species of primates.

Evolution is science. The questions you ask are philosophical. But before you start putting the human race on a pedestal, maybe you better think twice about what you assume are the differences between humans and other animals.

The problem is that you don't fully understand the vast multitude of variations that can occur in the processes of evolution. Neither do the scientists that study it. But the scientists don't insert God into the equation whenever something doesn't add up -- they look for other factors and they usually find them.

It might surprise you, Steven Hawkings (possibly the greatest mind alive--if not--close) often refers to "God" when chatting and writing about his thoughts... I don't know Steven's present stand on the existance of "God", however, I do NOT think he has claimed his/her/its' existance is impossible...

Steven is quite aware of the fact that probability and statistics make it very hard for evolution to be the sole reason for our state of existance...

Here is a link to some of his musings and quotes, a search of the net will provide more:

Hello, Scott

Long time no hear. You have a hardware solution (the router) and it is an excellent solution of course. I was speaking in generalities, of course, and the hardware solution is actually the preferred solution. But no solution can leave one very vulnerable. I just sent a URL to a neighbor to run the on-line virus scan (house call). She had a problem before when a "tech" reformatted her hard drive and didn't put the anti-virus nor firewall in place.

She upgraded to XP and I had to inform her she wanted to set up an account for herself as a user and not log in as administrator and leave the computer on 24/7 (she is on cable).

Yep, Monday evening she told me she had problems again. The last time it took me two trips over there and I am not doing it again. If she is still capable of accessing the Internet, she can do the on-line scan and probably pretty much fix the thing (for a short while). Hmmmm ... wonder if she knows about system restore? I don't know; I do know that I'm not going through that again (at least for free LOL). Come to think of it, I don't really want to go over there again - regardless.

Copper wire should NEVER be used as your ground because (the reasons you stated, in addition to...) the inductance value is piss poor.
Copper strap is always desirable over wire. FWIW, many people, hammies included, feel they are using copper wire when they are in reality using copper COATED wire. No matter,,, copper wire doesn't compare to copper strap.

Strap is better, but due to skin effect, you could copper coat steel and it would work as well for rf as solid copper. Hmmmm .... come to think of it, they do make that stuff.

I used to use 8 gauge copper wire for my longwire antenna. Despite being held by several trees and anchored at the house, nothing ever brought it down. Nothing like a lot of copper. Come to think of it, it was several hundred feet long and worked gangbusterly on 160 as well as the other bands.
25 watts and I was solid pretty much across the country at night; during the daytime, I still pounded into Washington D.C. from Rochester, NY using 65 watts. That was on 160. 15 and 20 meters and 75 watts worked the world with no problem - other than the fact that the pattern of that antenna was real strange. I never got more than a fair report from England, but Norway, Sweden, and Denmark would always give me a report of a very strong signal.

Same with Italy.

Regardless, I'd never use anything as light as 18 gauge wire for anything.

How can we all be that stupid? How can you be the only one who knows how to communicate? How is it that you are the only one who has any memory, intellect, and communication skills?

You've been asked a very simple question "I AmnotGeorgeBush." I have not seen you answer it for several days now.

That's because hamfests have been taken over by computer folks; almost no radios to be found these days.

Stephen Hawking could be considered to be the contemporary equivalent of John Tyndall, a scientist about 100 years ago that was popular because of his ability to communicate scientific principles to the masses, but was consistently (and safely) a decade or two behind the current state of mainstream research. For example, the theory that matter is composed of spherical waves is nothing new. It was even proposed (and subsequently ridiculed) in Tyndall's day. There has always been criticizm of the big-bang theory which, after several decades, is finally receiving due attention. And the Michelson-Morley experiment is -only now- getting a second look by the mainstream scientific community because of attention drawn to the logical fallacy used by the experimenters to reach their conclusion. Until now their conclusion was accepted as fact because it was the foundation of Einstein's theory of Special Relativity, and nobody dared criticize
-that- man despite his own admissions that he might have been wrong.
Which brings us to the -real- problem.....

The politics of science is often more important than the science itself. It's a proven fact that the Earth is undergoing a period of global warming, and that it's caused by the influence of man on the environment. But politics plays the game that such facts are nothing more than speculations made by a few fringe researchers looking to get their names in the journals. And while I may not agree with some of the currently accepted scientific theories or conclusions, nothing in science is written in stone -- it is theory that is subject to change upon new discoveries that are being made all the time, and will continue to be made as long as there are people who are less than fully satisfied with the current level of understanding. With that in mind, it's easy to see how so many profound discoveries were made by malcontents living under religious authoritarian governments. In my opinion, there should be a seperation of science and state just like there is (supposed to be) a seperation of church and state. I think Galileo might agree with me on that one.

As to whether life exists by accident or design, feel free to believe what you want. It's clear that science is far more complex than any one person can possibly comprehend, so to believe that the Universe works on purely scientific principles is, like any religion, simply a matter of faith. I place my faith not just in science, but also in the logical priciples upon which the scientific process works. The current state of science may not be perfect but at least it continues to grow and evolve, seeking deeper understandings of why things are the way they are, instead of stagnating like so many religious beliefs that were stalled by the blind acceptance of myths, legends, traditions and ancient literature.

How did life come to be? Who cares? The only fact we know is that it -does- exist. So let's just make the most of it while it lasts.

They're getting harder to find in good condition. I've always liked Turner's mobile mics, especially the +3. The +3 desk mike was a favorite of mine for SSB.

A basement in Florida comes with a mandatory swimming pool. ;-)

There are criminal provisions in the communications act of 1934. But the point is that nothing will happen if you are never caught. But the fact that you are not likely to get caught does not diminish the illegality and societal irresponsibility of engaging in the acts.

The FCC rules do carry criminal as well as civil penalties should they choose to apply them, if the case warrants it.

Look at FCC regs again. There are certainly criminal penalties associated with them. Ask your buddy "Bob-noxious" about the criminal penalties associated with pirate radio.

You want to talk about facts? The facts are that the FCC can and does auction off chunks of spectrum to commercial entities to use. They also regulate those chunks. They also set aside some spectrum for "public use". Yes, they administer it, as an arm and representative proxy of the U.S. government. So, while the FCC might not directly
"own" the airwaves, the U.S. government does.

The reality is that even a carrier current system needs to be authorized by the FCC. So a radio system capable of covering a 2500 acre church camp would need FCC permission to operate.

This is true, the FCC isn't checking the immigration status of every CB operator, and it won't come up unless the person is cited for other rule violations. It's sort of like the seatbelt law in many states.
You can't get stopped for it alone, but if you are stopped for another violation, they can cite you for failing to wear a seatbelt at the same time.

Again, it seems that you justify ignoring rules based on the

But you guys who are operating illegally are using all sort of excuses to justify or downplay this illegality. The fact that the FCC isn't actively pursuing freebanders, is not a justification or a silent nod allowing you to operate there.

Well, no, that's my whole point. Something has to "guide" the development of life. Something has to make the decision whether 2 legs are better than four, and whether a fifth finger makes for a more effective tool, yet 6 fingers is overkill etc.

If not, then that's negates much of the evolutionary theory. If the purpose of evolution is gradual improvement or a species, then the
"old" should die off as it is replaced by the "new".

This explains subtle variations within a specific species, but that doesn't explain how a bird came to be in the first place. Are you proposing that a winged creature suddenly appeared by accident, as a mutation from a land-based critter, and it proliferated all by itself.
What taught it to fly in the first place? How could a genetic anomaly take into consideration the dynamics of flight?

>>Evolution only explains a small part of the puzzle.

>No, you have only -learned- a small part of the puzzle.

This is true. There are very few facts and a whole host of theories which cropped up to try to explain the facts.

The theory of intelligent design is no more far-fetched than the idea that life began here spontaneously and proliferated into a diverse eco system, totally at random.

Yes, but it all relates in the bigger picture.

Are you suggesting that other animal species are capable of possessing similar intellectual capabilities as we have? In some cases certain primate species have displayed social structures which transcend simple instinctive behavior. They have also been observed fashioning crude tools to obtain food. Dolphins and whales seem to communicate with a rudimentary language. But not one other species can do it all, in the same way that we do.

I don't accept the theory that if you place a group of monkeys in a cage with a bunch of typewriters that they'll eventually write every great piece of literary works. They might type out every letter that is contained within those works, but they will not get the order correct. Such is the nature of chaos and randomness. It lacks structure, direction, and order, and those elements are required for meaningful results to occur.

There are still far too many unanswered questions to discount the

There has been no conclusive proof that global warming is primarily the result of man's influence over the environment. In fact there has been clear evidence that this planet has experienced major cyclical climatic changes over the eons. The current warming trend may just be a part of that process, and man's contribution to it may be much less

| Stephen Hawking could be considered to be the contemporary equivalent
| of John Tyndall, a scientist about 100 years ago that was popular
| because of his ability to communicate scientific principles to the
| masses, but was consistently (and safely) a decade or two behind the | current state of mainstream research. For example, the theory that | matter is composed of spherical waves is nothing new. It was even
| proposed (and subsequently ridiculed) in Tyndall's day. There has | always been criticizm of the big-bang theory which, after several | decades, is finally receiving due attention. And the Michelson-Morley

| experiment is -only now- getting a second look by the mainstream
| scientific community because of attention drawn to the logical fallacy
| used by the experimenters to reach their conclusion. Until now their
| conclusion was accepted as fact because it was the foundation of
| Einstein's theory of Special Relativity, and nobody dared criticize
| -that- man despite his own admissions that he might have been wrong.
| Which brings us to the -real- problem.....
|
| The politics of science is often more important than the science
| itself. It's a proven fact that the Earth is undergoing a period of
| global warming, and that it's caused by the influence of man on the | environment. But politics plays the game that such facts are nothing | more than speculations made by a few fringe researchers looking to get
| their names in the journals. And while I may not agree with some of
| the currently accepted scientific theories or conclusions, nothing in
| science is written in stone -- it is theory that is subject to change
| upon new discoveries that are being made all the time, and will | continue to be made as long as there are people who are less than
| fully satisfied with the current level of understanding. With that in | mind, it's easy to see how so many profound discoveries were made by | malcontents living under religious authoritarian governments. In my | opinion, there should be a seperation of science and state just like
| there is (supposed to be) a seperation of church and state. I think
| Galileo might agree with me on that one.
| As to whether life exists by accident or design, feel free to believe | what you want. It's clear that science is far more complex than any
| one person can possibly comprehend, so to believe that the Universe
| works on purely scientific principles is, like any religion, simply a | matter of faith. I place my faith not just in science, but also in the | logical priciples upon which the scientific process works. The current | state of science may not be perfect but at least it continues to grow
| and evolve, seeking deeper understandings of why things are the way
| they are, instead of stagnating like so many religious beliefs that | were stalled by the blind acceptance of myths, legends, traditions and | ancient literature.
|
| How did life come to be? Who cares? The only fact we know is that it | -does- exist. So let's just make the most of it while it lasts.

Dave:

You said, "So, while the FCC might not directly
"own" the airwaves, the U.S. government does."

This is grossly mis-leading!!! The gov't owns NOTHING!!!! They are a group of indivduals who are elected, appointed, and hired to do the citizens business. They have a job to do--if they either cannot or will not do it without becomming self-serving employees--they simply need fired.

These public servants, from the president on down, need to be worried about what the citizens of this country need and want--and what the citizens of this country are telling them to do.

Just like if I hired an employee to help me in a private business--they are directly answerable to their employers...

What the gov't needs to do is set aside a bit of the radio spectrum for use in conducing the citizens business--some for commercial use--some for hobby-expermental use... and the rest IS THE CITIZENS!!!!!

Warmest regards,
John

No, it's an establishment clause that states (quite plainly) that congress shall not establish an "official" religion, and may not prevent anyone from exercising their own personal religious beliefs.
Nowhere can you state accurately that that statement implies that there shall be no religious influences in the day to day operation of the government.

Maybe you did read the constitution, but you don't seem to understand

Much. They are taking this to an extreme. And here again, you are displaying yet another of your contradictions. You who claim to support the constitution and the wisdom of our forefathers (who were all religious people), yet now advocate that we go above and beyond

Marital status is a more accurate reflection of the institution of marriage.

And some people remain married for 50 years. Once they are married, they are not counted again in "marriage rates" but they still count as a matter of marital status. Marital status gives a much better picture of the state of marriage as it is.

There's nothing in the constitution that prohibits you from marrying Dolly the cloned sheep either. But other "rules" would have a problem with it.

Your problem is that you see the constitution as the be all and end all of all rules and laws. The constitution does not address each and every life situation that could have been foreseen 200+ years ago.

> So it's not my >place to judge. And that would be even -more- true if I was a

It's one thing to forgive sin. It's totally another to condone and encourage further participation in it.

A Christian would forgive someone who stole their car. But that doesn't mean the law should be changed to allow theft.

>You hate gays.

No, I don't. If I hated gays, I'd want them exterminated.

So then based on your "faith" in the constitution, you'd have no objection to pedophiles having the right to marry?

>That's the

No, you are not. You are a hypocrite. You "tolerate" things you have a personal agreement with or indifference to. But you have little tolerance for those who do not share your viewpoint. The reckless assigning of vitriolic names like "bigot" is proof of that.

I've read the constitution many times over. We spent a whole course in the constitution. But I'll admit, I find it amusing that you try.

The time I spend on the computer is minuscule. When you are parked on

I challenge the notion that change is inevitable. What you are embracing is the idea of predetermination. Something I would not expect from a existential atheist.

If we can effect change, should we not have the responsibility to prevent change that would promote demoralization?

In order for you to claim such a "societal irresponsibility" exists, there first must exist a "societal responsibility" somehwere other than your mind regarding such (cb radio)....can you cite it?
 Once again, this is the difference between what constitutes a criminal act vs a civil act.
The penalties are not the same.

>But it's still illegal.

(shrug),,,,which has -never- been contested by anyone here, yet, for some curious reason unbeknownst to all but yourself, you have taken it upon yourself to assume status and annoint yourself some sort of imaginary right to confront others concerning their non-criminal act.

I would hedge zero times have you actually confronted a real criminal or law breaker in the act and in person.

>I certainly would if the opportunity presented

It presents itself daily to you in the form of speeders,,a act that can cause physical damage or death when violated, which carry real criminal pealties, unlike dxing or freebanding. When was the last time you confronted one and how was it done?

Right,,,it means not being used.To use your analogy regarding physical property,,,,if a lot or property is abandoned, and one tends the ground, takes care of it, and pays the tax on it for x amount of years, the often land becomes the property of the caretaker who has been taking care of it and paying the taxes.

>There are many abandoned buildings around.

>But you are still not allowed to trespass there.

Yet, many people use these abandon buildings on a regular basis with immunity. Bums,,,vagrants, crackheads, etc.
See above for examples of a form of citizen eminent domain.

I'll
reiterate what you already found in google on many occasion,,,,,education is the key.

>Much like a public park.

Nothing like a public park, as breaking the law you speak of (trespass) can result in criminal charges, unlike talking on the freeband.

What justification? The fact that you continue to incorrectly claim I

> That is anti-social behavior.

So is the behavior of sports fanatics and religious zealots, both a very real part of the fabric that weaves America. But most people understand tolerance is a necessary gem to a successful America and certain acts are placed in to proper perspective by the majority...a perfect example is the majority of the populace do not consider speeders "criminals" like yourself.

By virtue of administration. Auctions are held daily all over the place.
They do not own what they auction, but like the FCC, are merely charged with the administering of such.

Who is charged with administering what belongs to the public via their

Nope. The citizens of the US "own" the airwaves by virtue of their tax dollars paying for all that is related to it.

I know you elitist hammies believe this to be true about your ticket, but it simply does not apply to cb, as practically any American citizen is granted the "right" to broadcast, via a cb, simply by ownership of one. This does not exactly equate to any "privilege".

The immigration use was but one example. There are countless more of how anyone can use a cb simply by purchasing one off the shelf or from anotehr party.

Yea,,well they just changed the law here,,they can pull one over for not wearing it,,it's no longer a secondary offense (in Fl) , but a primary offense.

>Again, it seems that you justify ignoring rules

>based on the unlikelihood of being cited.

When I began selectively ignoring specific rules for a specific purpose (which happens to be THE definition of civil disobedience), most weren't even aware such rules existed, which nullifies any possible position presented by yourself regarding ignoring rules on the unlikelihood of not being cited. In fact, when cbers were sliding up one or in between to "channel 22a", most had no clue it was illegal.

You said one will not likely catch AIDS if one practices monogamy. This would only hold true if both were virgins when getting married..,not practical when applied to present reality, as the vast majority have a sexual past history.

 There are instances where the HIV virus is semi-dormant for years and

That you consider a past sexual history equals "acting like a slut" reveals several interesting facts of your beliefs regarding this topic.

The ONLY "cure" is found in
the prevention..in other words, abstaining from pre-marital sex then both parties getting a thorough CBC (complete blood count) prior to tying the knot.

>Now you are finally seeing the light.

I've known this since 1980 when the disease was traced to a cave in Africa and suspected of being contracted from bat guano (the initial host.....believed by scholars) or a rhesus monkey. Google "The Hot Zone" and the parallels are there for the reading. Better yet, read the book.
Now if only you could understand that monogamy today does not discount one's past, as the majority of people have a sexual past history prior to marriage and monogamy. Your claim that monogamy decreases the chance of acquiring AIDS assumes incorrectly these people had no sexual past history. The "clean" mark was originally 5 years, then 10, then 15,,,it's now believed that 20 years is the "safe" mark regarding past sexual activity..in other words, if you have een monogamous for 20 years with your partner, and your partner has also been monogamous for that amount of time, the likelihood of contracting the virus decreases substantially, but is -still- not discounted totally.

>Congratulations!

I'd like to say the same regarding your beliefs of contracting this disease, but I think your moral beliefs are heavily biasing and preventing you from obtaining the facts regarding such.

What is wrong with correcting the law... instead of applying patches to a worn out system? Write your congressman today!!!

Most of these ancient institutions and methods were created when people were still afraid of electricity--thought it took a genius to use radio--INDEED--the ignorant masses viewed radio as almost "Magic!"

Times have changed, kids run 10 watt Ghz transmitters on 2100 Mhz and tear up business wireless networks for miles--important business and public communications are affected--these kids need an outlet for their energies....

The world has changed drastically--the laws still reflect stoneage beliefs and structure...

So has crime. What is wrong with seeking to remove that of which the law clearly defines? You are one of the most vocal in this group to redundantly invoke that just because something is practiced far and wide doesn't make it legal or right,,,,but of course, it does when you agree with it.

Hahaha..

(Most all copper wire on the market is soft draw and will break after a few years of constant tension. Hard draw copper wire is very tough and robust. I use 18g lamp safety wire. This is the thin copper wire that servers as a safety ground and as a safety wire in case a link in the lamp chain breaks in hanging chandeliers.)

Copper wire should NEVER be used as your ground because (the reasons you stated, in addition to...) the inductance value is piss poor.
Copper strap is always desirable over wire. FWIW, many people, hammies included, feel they are using copper wire when they are in reality using copper COATED wire. No matter,,, copper wire doesn't compare to copper strap.

To do what with? Besides, after you divide up the spectrum between legitimate commercial services (which are usually available to the

Who are radio pirates, operating unauthorized radio transmitters. The provisions in the communications act of 1934 do not differentiate which bands unauthorized transmitters can incur criminal penalties.
If the FCC chose to do so, freebanders can be charged criminally. The fact that they have not chosen to do any more than sporadic citations, does not diminish the fact that they could if they chose to.

If I were to confront one speeder, I'd have to confront all of them, and I cannot do that. I have, on occasion, prevented speeding by paralleling someone in the right lane holding the legal speed limit.

Besides, speeding is not a criminal offense, it's a simple summary offense. What it may or may not lead to is irrelevant, and calls for speculation.

Again, the regs do not differentiate which bands will carry those criminal penalties for unauthorized use. Simple dx on the legal 40 channels is a nothing citation. But couple it with running on unauthorized freqs, and the severity increases. The only thing you have in your favor is that the FCC is not motivated enough to do much about it. It's not that it's any less illegal, it's only that they don't care enough.

You can legally operate a part 15 transmitter on the broadcast band. I built one such transmitter when I was a kid. But the antenna restrictions specified no longer than a 5 foot wire.

I could hear my "station" up to about a block away.

That depends on the circumstances. An authorized carrier current station operating within the technical requirements is not responsible for incidental radiation beyond it's physical boundaries.

Cordless phones are part 15 devices, yet they can carry beyond your property lines.

Well, that's a big glaring example of how reality can defy or obstruct the rules. The fact that this happens does not diminish the letter of

I have a hard time believing that these bright, intelligent CB operators would be so ignorant as to the legality of what they were doing. In any case, ignorance of the law is no excuse. In those days, as a condition of your CB license (You did have a license right?), it was required that you read and understand the part 95 rule book. You couldn't plead ignorance, without opening yourself to the charge of making a false statement on your license registration form.

No one in my area ever believed that sliding through channels outside of the 23 standard channels was in any way legal. We took our chances based on the unlikelihood of getting popped. Had there been more busts, most of us would have been too scared to venture out of band.
In fact there were regular rumors that the FCC was "in town" and many of us toned down our antics, hid the amps in the garage, and stayed on the legal channels, at least until the "alert" passed.

The point being that we all knew exactly what we were doing then.

What substance do you want? Do you deny that people other than you operate illegally, and don't care about it?

How does jamming a repeater create a safety issue? how do illegal freebanding hams create a safety issue over than of illegal CB
freebanders (As if there really is a difference?)

They have plenty of teeth. Their bite is interested in chomping away

Not really. they still have to physically identify the illegal operator. That means moving beyond the confines of their cushy offices.

If true, then your buddy "Bob" should be dropping loads in his pants right now.

You cannot pinpoint transmissions from a single point. It requires at least 3 points to do with any accuracy. Why do you think there are so many GPS satellites in position in order to find a precise bearing?

There was a rumor a few years back, and in fact I knew a guy who once claimed to work on this system, where the GPS satellites could be made to work "in reverse" and pinpoint any radio transmission emanating from earth with the same accuracy as a GPS. But I cannot verify this.

Nothing, if that's indeed the case. But those religious influences are adorned all over our government buildings and in our government business. Why is it only now do certain people find exception to it?

>You are one of the most vocal in this group to

When it's not illegal, I agree with it.

The fact is that despite recent misinterpretations of the establishment clause in the constitution by left wing zealots, we have had religious influences in our government from the very beginning. I would argue that it was those influences which made this country one of strong moral and ethical principles. It's no coincidence that the decline in governmental ethics and morality correspond with efforts to eradicate religious influences from our lives.

There was once a day when democrats and republicans practiced a little thing called compromise.

Have you figured out how you are going to make your spreader bars, what are you going to use for the boom, are you going to go horizontal or vertical with it, or a combination of same, how high is your tower, mast pole, are you mechanically challenged or are you one who can challenge mechanics, what rotor will you use on it?

That be about all the questions for you at this time.

And the less promiscuous that past is, the less likely that one will catch AIDS.

Besides, you imply that it's next to impossible or, at the very least, unrealistic for someone to wait until marriage to engage in sexual relations. There is nothing honorable or otherwise noteworthy about becoming sexually active in your teenaged years, despite the image that the major media outlets try to paint to those overly impressionable teenagers.

Yes, it reveals that I don't believe that sex should be engaged as a casual activity. Sex is a part of an act of love, to be shared with someone who you have a much deeper emotional bond with. Not something for two people, who are barely friends, who are simply looking to kill a few hours.

That's part of the problem.

It's not an "all or nothing" proposition. While total abstinence before marriage is a concept that's lost on this latest hedonistic generation, the simple truth is that the less partners you have had, the less your chances of catching AIDS. The type of partners you have had also affects your chances. Frequent patronage of prostitutes, for instance, greatly increases your chances of getting the disease.

Better that than hooking up with someone who's rear end has seen more bedsheets than underwear. My wife and I recently celebrated our 20 year wedding anniversary. So I guess we're safe ;-)

>>Congratulations!

>I'd like to say the same regarding your beliefs of contracting this

The facts are quite simple. The less sex you engage in, the lesser your chances of getting AIDS. Those who contract the disease have only themselves, by virtue of their activities, to blame in most cases.

I am quite certain that my risk of contracting AIDS is less than my chances of getting hit by a meteor. I am far more concerned with cancer and heart disease as these pose a much greater risk to the members of my family.

Like I said before: Better late than never. But if you want to know why -now- instead of 20 or 100 years ago, just take a look at the demographics of the Republican base. They have turned their party into the "unofficial" party of the conservative Christians because it's an easy crowd, and they are trying to make every election a vote about religious convictions instead of government issues. The idea is certainly creative, but it will eventually fail because people don't want the government meddling with their religious freedoms.

That's only part of the scope. Read it again: The Amendment prohibits Congress from making laws that would -respect- any religion. More specifically, they can't help create a religious institution, nor can they prevent them from existing. If some people want to establish a religion that worships Satan, or Baal, or even Thomas Edison, there's nothing the government can do to about it one way or another. THAT'S what it means. And that -includes- prohibiting Congress from making the US an "unofficial" Christian state whether it be by tradition or by majority. Seperation of church and state is the -only- way to preserve the right of religious freedom for everyone, and the First Amendment does exactly that.

Despite the horrendous grammatical construction of your claim, what part of the Constitution requires, or even -suggests-, that religious influence should play any role in the government? There is ONLY ONE reference that could even come -close- to what you claim, and that would be in the final Article, where the date of its ratification is written as "...the Seventeenth Day of September in the Year of our

As a matter of fact I have. I have been sworn as a juror twice, a few times as a witness, four times as a complaintant, and even a couple times as a defendant. I also swore an oath when I enlisted. And every time I took an oath it was an oath that was administered to atheists.
Usually, the phrase "so help me God" is replaced by something along the lines of, "under penalty of perjury in the State of so-and-so", or something along those lines. I have also heard Jews and Muslims take oaths that are different than those taken by people calling themselves Christians. And if -you- haven't heard these oaths then -you- haven't spent much time in a -real- courtroom. So get your face out of the TV and learn about the -real- world instead of accepting as fact anything you see or hear on "CSI Fargo", "Jury Crossing" or whatever Hollywood rendition of 'forensics' you waste your time watching.

Unless you are an idiot and are handling your case pro-se, you will be called by an attorney who will ask you, prior to the hearing, if you have any problem with swearing an oath on the Bible. That's his/her job. Even in small claims court where you don't have an attorney, the court gives you an instruction pamphlet that tells you about different oaths that are used depending on your religious beliefs; all you have to do is mention it to the court clerk and they will give you the appropriate oath. No "stink" required.

You really -are- an idiot, aren't you? Heck, and I thought I was just being snotty.....

I made the statement that "nearly half of all marriages end in divorce". This is easily verified by any kid that watched two or more episodes of Sesame Street: Compare the marriage rate to the divorce rate. If you have 100 marriages and 50 of them end because of divorce, it is obvious -- even to the most casual observer -- that half of those marriages ended in divorce.

What the marriage status data -can't- tell is the number of times a person gets married in a given year, or the number of people who are married and divorced within the same year. But I would really like to see how you divined a 9.6% divorce rate from that data -- it should be good for a laugh.

>>You are also ignoring the fact that the divorce rate says nothing by >>itself. According to the CDC, during the year 2003 there were 7.5

If people married in previous years have a lower rate of divorce then the divorce rate is -higher- among recent marriages. Or vice-versa. The figures are still valid no matter how you slice it -- half of all marriages end up in divorce. Period.

Based on the facts. The fact is that the Bible (God) not only allows polygamy, but quite literally -encourages- taking of more than one wife -as well as- fucking any receptive concubines. That "tradition" dates back to well before Abraham and continues to this day in many

Your statistics are flawed, and so is your argument: If all of those alleged 9.6% divorcees were Christians (which they are not, but let's assume for the moment that they are), then that's at least 9.6% of the church that doesn't value marriage as much as you claim. OTOH, if all those 9.6% are -not- Christians then that's a significant chunk of the -rest- of the population that doesn't share your concerns. Either way, if 9.6% of the population were rapists or arsonists, you can bet that there would be a HUGE ruckus from the other 90.4%. But I don't hear a huge ruckus, Dave -- only a few very loud, obnoxious, holier-than-thou zealots trying to force -their- interpretation of 'morality' on the majority.

Does gay marriage deprive you of your car? Come to think of it, you are still avoiding the big question: how does gay marriage deprive you of your rights, Dave?

>>You hate gays.
>
>No, I don't. If I hated gays, I'd want them exterminated.

You basically want to 'exterminate' any legal homosexual marriage. So you hate legal homosexual marriage. But the only difference between homosexual marriage and heterosexual marriage is the sexual preference of the partners. Therefore, the source of your hatred can -only- be attributed to homosexuality. You hate gays. You are a bigot, Dave.

Pedophiles have rights, too. If they can live their lives without couldn't care less what they do.

So how does gay marriage infringe on -your- rights, Dave?

But you -are- a bigot. Other people live their lives in a way that is none of your business. Yet you feel that some of their choices are intolerable and that they should be prohibited from exercising the same rights and freedoms you enjoy simply because they don't comply with your definition of 'tradition'. In a nutshell, they are different and you want them to stop being different because you don't like it.

If that doesn't fall within the definition of 'bigotry' then I don't know what does.

And for the record, I have great tolerance for just about everything; even Bush, and even stupidity. But I have little or no tolerance for ignorance.

That line is drawn by society. It is not drawn by me, by you, or by a few poorly-educated homophobes that would probably draw a bead on some other 'deviant' behavior if they were to win this battle. The problem is that if they are allowed to get their way, nobody knows what group will be next or where they will stop. And if you think that "ethnic cleansing" or some other form of genocide is ridiculous, go to the library and study up on pre-WWII Germany, or Eastern Europe after the fall of the USSR -- or read about Africa in the news of today.

You propose to allow a few fanatic groups the ability to dictate religion, morality, or even tradition -- now THAT'S a slippery slope!

That's funny because I'm a heavy smoker. But I don't think anyone is Then your challenge is a lost cause from the get-go. Should you succeed in preventing anything from changing, that in and of itself is a change because the norm is change. Therefore you have defeated your own objective by 'changing the rate of change'. And even if you dismiss that as nothing more than a temporal card-trick, the fact remains that events happen beyond the control of humans, that cannot be prevented. Volcanos, hurricanes, asteroids, earthquakes..... change is inevitable. It's a fact.

floatation device or you -will- sink.

That's a neat idea, but Bush already tried that angle -- he failed everything else so far, go find someone that can explain it to you.

Isn't there an Amish settlement in your area?

>Based on what criteria? There has to be a purpose for life.

Why? Because you say so? Because you can't figure out what to do with your life? Or did you adopt that idea as part of a twelve-step program?

> What
>drives that purpose?

When Moses asked God what the people should call him, God responded, "I am that I am." IOW, God exists for the sake of himself. For us mortals it isn't much different -- life is spent propogating ourselves. For human males that consists of impregnating as many females as possible, hence the common characteristic of men to "love 'em and leave 'em", and their willingness to screw just about anything that is receptive to their advances. The female reproductive role is more complex. Traditionally it has been to nurture and protect the larvae until they can be kicked out of the house. This explains why some women are gold-diggers (money = security, taken to an extreme).

Ironically, monogomy isn't common with humans, their behavior being more like some species of birds. The female chooses a mate that is a 'provider', one she feels is also competent in a nurturing role. Yet she seeks a different male for breeding, looking for characteristics such as aggressiveness and healthiness, and other attributes that are carried genetically and will give her offspring a better chance at survival. With two 'mates' she gets the best of both worlds, since one male with all those traits is nearly impossible to find. Meanwhile, the males are just trying to dip their wicks anywhere they can.

BTW, this isn't my theory. It's from a well-documented study on human behavior that has been supported by numerous independent studies.

But if you need to find a purpose that transcends natural biology, try the simple fact that we -can- transcend biology. That, by itself, as a "purpose" for life, is reflected heavily in the Bhuddist faith and to some extent with the Hindu. The 'challenge' of life, therefore, is to overcome our animal instincts and attain a higher level of being.

Flip the coin and you have people that think you should live hard and die young. It's doubtful that they have any regrets since they don't have much time to think about such things.

Of course you could always take a perspective from Monty Python, but I think Monty Python itself is reason enough to live.

And what else is important is what goes through your mind in your final moments of life. Did you make the right choices? Could you have done any better? Will anyone remember you for who you really are? And are you sure they really -do- know who you are? But that's assuming, of course, that anyone cares if you are on your death bed. If you ever visit a nursing home you will find that it's more common for people to die alone, especially if they don't have money or property to pass on in their will. Will that be the case with you? Or will your "loved ones" view your life more intrinsically? And will you have doubts about life after death, or will you resign yourself to lies that you used to convince yourself one way or the other so you wouldn't have to worry about it? Which brings me to my own philosophy regarding the matter:

It's hard to evaluate life until you have something to compare it to.
Most people who have come close to death consider it a life-altering experience, and their lives are improved afterwards. It's not a good idea to die just so you can live better, but at least you can explore the ideas and perspectives of some of the best minds on the subject.
For that line of philosophy I would recommend yet another good book:
"Thinking Through Death" by Dr. Scott Kramer. If you want a copy just drop me an email, I have a couple spares.

>>> Who decides whether a mutation
>>>is "beneficial" or not? Natural selection, otherwise known as >>>survival of the fittest, assumes that gene mutations which result in a
>>>"better" species, would survive while the "lesser' versions of the >>>apes. Why then are apes still around if we are the "new and improved" >>>version of the ape?

>>
>>Because you assume that the "'lesser' versions of the species would >>die out", which is not necessarily the case.
>
>If not, then that's negates much of the evolutionary theory.

I don't recall that being part of the theory at all. The theory is that variations which can adapt to a changing environment will survive -irrespective- of their origins.

> If the >purpose of evolution is gradual improvement or a species, then the
>"old" should die off as it is replaced by the "new".

That's only an assumption on your part because you have never studied the subject. If you -had- studied the subject you would know better than to make such an ignorant remark.

>>There can be many >>circumstances where a variation doesn't compete for the same resources

>>so are many species of primates.
>This explains subtle variations within a specific species, but that >proposing that a winged creature suddenly appeared by accident, as a >mutation from a land-based critter, and it proliferated all by itself.

>What taught it to fly in the first place? How could a genetic anomaly >take into consideration the dynamics of flight?

I suppose I should start with Rocky and Bulwinkle. You see, Rocky is a "flying squirrel". They don't really fly, but glide from one place to another using skin that has overgrown. The skin probably evolved because the critters kept falling out of the trees, and the species with the variation of loose skin allowed more of them to survive the falls. Easy enough. The next logical step would be an variation of their "wings" that would allow them to glide for longer periods of time, and over greater distances. Perhaps even a variation where muscle movement gives a little extra flight time. Eventually, over a few hundred thousand years and thousands of generations, there will probably be a squirrel that can really fly.

But you propose that one day there was a rat, then a miracle occured and poof there was a bat? I don't think so, Dave.

>>>Evolution only explains a small part of the puzzle.
>>No, you have only -learned- a small part of the puzzle.

Such is science. Some theories will be dismissed while others will be proven as fact. And it's doubtful that divine providence will be a factor in any scientific theory.

>The theory of intelligent design is no more far-fetched than the idea >that life began here spontaneously and proliferated into a diverse eco >system, totally at random.

You are assuming that "life began here spontaneously" and evolved
"totally at random". Research strongly suggests that neither are true.

Talk to Skippy about your "bigger picture" cause that type of BS unified theory".

>> But
>>before you start putting the human race on a pedestal, maybe you >with a rudimentary language. But not one other species can do it all, >in the same way that we do.

So you have noticed that animals are different and have different characteristics. Congratulations. What you -haven't- learned that the same is true within the human species.

Yes, animals possess some intellectual capabilities. Beavers are pretty good engineers, and nobody can tell me that their behavior is purely instinctual since the circumstances for every beaver dam are different, and requires some intelligence in order to build those "crude" tools. Did you know that dolphins have sex just for fun? They also seem to learn things faster and easier than most teenage humans. And just about every animal has some form of communication, not just dolphins and a few others. Ants communicate with chemicals, bees communicate by 'dancing', dogs communicate by pissing on trees and smelling each others butts, etc, etc.

But on the other hand, why would anyone think that human behavior is anything more than extentions of natural instinct? Everything we do somehow revolves around basic natural urges, whether it be breathing, sleeping, eating, sex, reproduction, dying, etc. Probably the only two characteristics that set us apart from the rest of the animal kingdom is our propensity to destroy ourselves and our ability to show mercy. But then again, the former doesn't differentiate us from lemmings, and the latter is more a recognition of the futility of life than it is a divine influence. Either way, man can be just as cruel as nature and frequently proves that to be a fact.

So what's the difference between man and animal? Human arrogance in thinking he is something more than just another product of nature.

>> Neither do
>>the scientists that study it. But the scientists don't insert God into >>the equation whenever something doesn't add up -- they look for other

Discount it? No. But neither does it mean that we should jump to that conclusion because we haven't learned everything we can.

Your "imagination" is limited only yourself. Nothing odd about how you continue to prefer to change the topic to one of a poster instead of the topic. You see, this is a flub of the communication-challenged. Denial is not a river in Egypt. Try and remain focused on the topic and not allow your personal emotions to dictate poor communication form. Once again, remaining on topic is the preferred MO. If you continue to struggle with such, you may wish to examine your present agenda.

>And, surely you have rubbed elbows with (makes sign of cross, blesses the unsavory and newfound church member wearing Halloween mask) .

> and hold many as close personal friends--

Claiming you knew Sagan personally means nothing to the masses, so forgive my curiosity for inquiring as to why you felt it to important to mention? Feeling bad about yourself and needing a pick-me-up? LOL..

>the rich exchange you have with them keeps >you quite up to date--I can tell from your text...

And the contingency can tell quite more from your multiple posts "suddenly" (LMAO) focusing on nothing but myself. Now,,,THAT is the defnition of rich,,but you continue with the gaffes, so it's more than worth the entertainment.

>Nope, no one would ever confuse you with an

>"Arm-Chair-Genius."

Nor you with managing to remain on topic and focus on the subject instead of changing it to one of a poster you became fixated upon with your manias. Of course, people like yourself need reminded that usenet participants should focus on subject matter and not that of the poster, but like you said, no one would -ever- confuse you with someone who comprehended proper communication etiquette.

Right,,,it means not being used.To use your analogy regarding physical property,,,,if a lot or property is abandoned, and one tends the ground, takes care of it, and pays the tax on it for x amount of years, the often land becomes the property of the caretaker who has been taking care of it and paying the taxes.

Only to your misguided education or beliefs or whatever is responsible for you not grasping such a concept. It has not been tried with the FCC because even the lowly cbers seem to comprehend the spectrum is 1) not owned by the FCC and 2) not tangible property.

>There are many abandoned buildings around.

It's a realty,,much unlike the manner you incorrectly claim speeding is a summary offense (over 15 mph of the posted limit and it is no longer a sumary offense,,,in Fl AND other states). But this serevs to illustrate you either A) invoke only the portion of the law you want or B) invoke only the portion of the law you understand.

You said they did ever since your breakdown occurred in this group. What a change of view. in fact, I am proud to have been a part of usenet history in which you have done so many flips in your life.

>That is anti-social behavior.

I don't know about anti-social, but it certainly is unbecoming or indicative of one who is easily swayed in their core beliefs, especially when it was done by one of your age..several times.

So is the behavior of sports fanatics and religious zealots, both a very real part of the fabric that weaves America.

>In what way?

Breaking the law,,isn't that what you refer to as "anti-social" behavior? But then again, you have astutely illustrated you had no concept of the definition or the term "civil disobedience" and needed proper instruction regarding such..your problem is you disagree with how it is applied and in your rush to condemn the act, gaffed by attacking the very real and longstanding American and patriotic concept of civil disobedience.
But most people understand tolerance is a necessary gem to a successful America and certain acts are placed into proper perspective by the majority...a perfect example is the majority of the populace do not consider speeders "criminals" like yourself.

Another position of whcih you chose opposite end of the argument when taught. I'm proud of you.

Umm...you invoked speeding as a misplaced analogy on many occasion. Introducing a subject and crying foul when another uses it for a comparison is hypocritica. Do not introduce a subject if you do not wish it picked proeprly apart by others. You should have learned this with your unsolicited invocation of un-named sources and un-confirmed claims. The fact that you feel strong enough concerning a subject to claim such things but not provide for them, is telling.

Who is charged with administering what belongs to the public via their tax dollars. Not much different than an auction.

>Then why is the public not seeing the >proceeds of these sales?

Gee Dave,,they are..in the form of regulation and enforcement. You looking for some type procedural handout from an entity simply since it is tax dollar supported? That is the most hypocritical thing a republican can say,,,,I'm with Frank..you slept through class.

>So, while the FCC might not directly "own" the >airwaves, the U.S. government does.

Only when combined with other acts. If you feel simple freebanding (the context of which we speak) carries criminal charges, feel free to cite the passage or an example,,even one.

>What is "simple" freebanding? Again, I refer >you to the com act of 1934 and associated >regulations regarding unauthorized >transmitters.

The portion regarding unauthorized transmitters goes right out the window, Dave. Why can't you understand that? You incorrectly assume freebanders are all using unauthorized transmitters. How do you get through life with so many false assumptions responsible for your oft repeated gaffes?

Know of any test cases pushing the limit on this law?

>Pushing which law and in what way?

Transmitting, albeit, under the guise of part 15, to a much broader audience than permitted.

>Well, look into any "low power" pirate >broadcaster. Some have tried to claim that >their power is legal (even if their antennas are >not).

Once one is pirating, any legal guise under Part 15 vanishes.

>You can legally operate a part 15 transmitter

>on the broadcast band.

That invalidates your statement, then. If one is legal, why did you mistakenly refer to such as a pirate? You said "check into any low power pirate".

>I built one such transmitter when I was a kid.

>But the antenna restrictions specified no >longer than a 5 foot wire.

>I could hear my "station" up to about a block >away.

How is such defined? If a church camp own 2500 acres and broadcasts over such, and I sit on the public lake adjourning their property and can tune in their broadcast..is it now simply approached as a public broadcast?

>Most of those situations employ carrier current >transmitters which radiate only a short >distance from their "antenna" wires, thereby

Yes,,,but my question remains and is still valid.

>The reality is that even a carrier current >system needs to be authorized by the FCC.

>So a radio system capable of covering a 2500

>acre church camp would need FCC >permission to operate.

Sure,,,,,but again,,,if one was to zero in and receive the signal from property not owned by the entity transmitting under Part 15, what then? Isn't this a technical violation?

>That depends on the circumstances.

I gave you the circumstances.

> An authorized carrier current station operating >within the technical requirements is not >responsible for incidental radiation beyond it's >physical boundaries.

My parameters clearly defined the circumstances and the receiving end proved the example was not incidental but fixed and regular.

>Cordless phones are part 15 devices, yet they >can carry beyond your property lines.

Cordless phones are no required anywhere in the rules to stop transmitting at the end of your property. How did you make such a glaring error and from what rule did you misinterpret this?

>Instead of arguing with me, try looking into the >rules governing each service, and find out for >person may operate a CB radio, it is still not a >"right" to do so, it is a privilege granted by the >FCC, as the service is authorized by rule,

>even if a license is not required.

And if that law were serious, one would NOT be able to buy, plug and play. What stops an immigrant from using a cb? Nothing,,they all se them in the fruit fields.

>This is true, the FCC isn't checking the >immigration status of every CB operator,

The immigration use was but one example. There are countless more of how anyone can use a cb simply by purchasing one off the shelf or from anotehr party.

>Well, that's a big glaring example of how >reality can defy or obstruct the rules. The fact >that this happens does not diminish the letter >of the law.

What is happening (reality) has nothing to do with what the law says. I'm curious as to how you continue to always wind up back at making such an obscure and remote invalid connection between the two.

>One could say that the presence of a law >which is unenforceable is grounds for its >revocation. Maybe that time is now.

>and it won't come up unless the person is >cited for other rule violations.

Some rulesand laws need no changing because they are rightly not enforced..like blue laws still on the books.

>It's sort of like the seatbelt law in many states.

>You can't get stopped for it alone, but if you >are stopped for another violation, they can cite >you for failing to wear a seatbelt at the same >time.

Yea,,well they just changed the law here,,they can pull one over for not wearing it,,it's no longer a secondary offense (in Fl) , but a primary offense.

>I believe that's true in Pa, as well now. But it's >still secondary in other states.

>Again, it seems that you justify ignoring rules

>based on the unlikelihood of being cited.

When I began selectively ignoring specific rules for a specific purpose (which happens to be THE definition of civil disobedience), most weren't even aware such rules existed, which nullifies any possible position presented by yourself regarding ignoring rules on the unlikelihood of not being cited. In fact, when cbers were sliding up one or in between to "channel 22a", most had no clue it was illegal.

>I have a hard time believing that these bright, >intelligent CB operators would be so ignorant

>as to the legality of what they were doing.

Yea..all those kids tinkering and swapping crystals really took to regs and rules with their Archer walkie-talkies like a scholarly piece.
Again, reality takes precedence over your beliefs.

>In any case, ignorance of the law is no >excuse.

Don't you find it the least bit curious that only you feel obsessively and unreasonaly compelled to seek reasons why people do things.....especially cbers and freebanders, of all things.

>In those days, as a condition of your CB >license (You did have a license right?),

Not until the mid seventies and not for several years.

>it was required that you read and understand >the part 95 rule book.

How many kids read that wit their WT's they got under the tree?

> You couldn't plead ignorance, without >opening yourself to the charge of making a

There was no need.you are entertaining somethhing that ever occurred,,,the FCC didn't mess with kids funning around with swapping crystals, Dave, no matter how illegal it was.

>No one in my area ever believed that sliding >through channels outside of the 23 standard

Hahaha,,based on nothing more than a phantom voice on the air. At least you remain true to one core belief,...it a strange voice on the radio that compelled you to move to the spirit back then, now it's a strange cartoon name on the internet.

>The point being that we all knew exactly what >we were doing then.

Some of us know what we are doing now.

>As a >condition of that privilege comes your >responsibility to abide by the rules set fort in >various FCC parts depending on which

>You may not like it, but that's the way it is.

Actually, I love the manner in which the FCC enforces radio law right now and have said so on many occasion.

>Sure. The FCC is not as effective as they >should be,

The country disagrees with you, simply by virtue of what the FCC enforces.

>No, the FCC disagrees with me.

>The last time I looked, the rank and file citizen >has no input on what the FCC considers a >priority.

Umm..they do. Please check the manner in which a grievance is filed.
Such are not reserved exclusively for those who get busted and fined......in fact, that is but a single application.

>and freeload.... er, freebanders get away with >trespassing on other government administered

Because it's practically a non-issue with the majority of Americans.

>The majority of Americans forgot about CB

Which is why your personal bane remains a non-issue among the majority of the world.

>But you guys who are operating illegally are >using all sort of excuses to justify or downplay

>this illegality.

Then you should have no problem illustrating substance concerning your accusations, but you have failed to do so to date regarding any of these "guys" you incorrectly invoke.

>What substance do you want? Do you deny >that people other than you operate illegally,

>and don't care about it?

Stay with me, Dave. You not being provided a satisfactory explanation of why people do what they do simply because of the reality you are owed nothing by anyone, does not equate anyone justifying anything.

>Then who should they go after

Those who present a direct safety issue.

>Very few people fall into this category.

All hammies who jam repeaters and talk where they are not permitted (on the hammie band) fall into this category.

>How does jamming a repeater create a safety

You're an extra class hammie,,wait,,let me check,,N3CVJ,,,,yep,,you're an extra class hammie and can;t comprehend why jamming a repeater can present a safety issue? Classic and indicative of one who ironically is licensed for communications but knows little of it.

>how do illegal freebanding hams create a

I never said they should go after illegal freebanding hammies..you are losing your train of thought again..
They have plenty of teeth. Their bite is interested in chomping away with censorship of television.

>It's much easier for them to enforce.

Actually, the hammies are much easier to enforce.

>Not really. they still have to track down

>the illegal operator. That means moving >beyond the confines of their cushy offices.

"Tracking down" in the manner you believe is a thing of the past. The High Frequency Directional Finder in Laurel, Maryland pinpoints transmissions anywhere in the country immediately with no effort. Ask Scott about it.

>If true,

Then read about it if you don't want to ask Scott.

>then your buddy "Bob" should be dropping >loads in his pants right now.

Not at all. The technology is there so..I have to be careful how I say this,,,,,,,,,a sort of roving watered down signal is there. Those involved with B-o-B are confident his extremely selective transmissions will not be pinpointed,,and even if one or two were,,,,by the time they acted upon it,,,too late.

>You cannot pinpoint transmissions from a

No there isn't, for the simple reason that we do not have enough climatic history to determine just how and when the climate shifts

Not everything in life is codified, especially morality. If you need a you can start with Miss Manners and work your way up from there.

Then the concept of squatter's rights does not apply to radio spectrum. So I'm curious why you brought it up in that context.

I've seen far more ridiculous claims come forth by misguided citizens against the government. So I would not be surprised if someone tried the "squatter's rights" angle with respect to radio spectrum.

Then again, some people would rather just operate illegally rather than going through the trouble to have an perceived unjust rule changed. Those people are simply weak.

Is operation on the freeband not illegal? Should the law not be

What determines what works best? If, as you suggest, all advances in evolution occur as a random mutation (Which it would have to be if it were not deliberately introduced), what feedback mechanism exists to determine whether that single mutation will proliferate to other species, or even descendants of the same species?

Random and chaos are exactly that, actions which occur with no pattern or forethought.

But you can't build order from chaos. At least not without some intelligence guiding it.

Since it is likely that I am older than you, that is a physical

More insults? The fact is that you can't answer the question, and chose instead to mock me.

You believe what you want to believe based on nothing more than pure faith, which is no different than what I do. But the difference is that you arrogantly insist that I am somehow "wrong". You tell yourself that facts and logic back you up, but the truth is that there are little facts available to make a positive determination on whether life here evolved purely at random, and without any outside influence.
You further re-enforce your faith by telling yourself that the facts are out there, and that we just haven't found them yet. And while this is most likely true, you should be careful what you wish for. For the answers you seek may not be the ones you want to hear.

That is a hopelessly jaded position to take. You basically stated that all males have an intrinsic excuse for infidelity, in that they are instinctively hard wired for such behavior. The fact that was can transcend instinctive behavior plays no part in this I guess....

I know all too well. The Learning Channel had an very interesting series on human behavior and covered this topic and the parallels in the animal world. I also used this information in a debate once with a hard core feminist, who was forwarding the " all men are pigs" notion, and defended their behavior as instinctive programming. Of course, I did it just for the reaction. I believe that using primitive instinctive traits to justify unacceptable social behavior is simply a lame excuse for those who have a weak will.

I have studied the subject and the questions I raise are analytical and logical in nature. Either evolution is designed to improve the species, or not. If it is, then what feedback determines what is actually an improvement. If not, then what does improve the species?

Then why do other squirrels not have loose skin? Do they not fall from trees as well? Why only the "flying" squirrel? And what determined whether that skin actually helped them, other those other squirrels who don't?

Better late than never? Birds already fly. Why would a squirrel need to fly now? What tactical advantage would that provide it over non-flying squirrels? Would those random mutations also thin its bones, and provide the proper lift/drag ratio in order to attain sustained flight?

>But you propose that one day there was a rat, then a miracle occured

Despite the fact that you don't "think" so, does not mean that that's exactly what might have happened. It's certainly easier to rationalize than a series of random mutations adding up to a viable new species.

I conclude nothing of the sort. But I have an especially hard time accepting the totally at random theory of evolution, and prefer to

We may disagree on the exact definition of that intelligence, and without facts, it's pointless to debate it beyond that point other

That's rich..and wrong. Once again I ask you to explain how anything these "left wingers" say or do or interpret can matter at all regarding this issue while the republicans control the house and senate.
Nevertheless, the misinterpretation has been all yours even though Frank neatly wrapped it all up and presented you with the facts clearly indicating congress shall keep the clause of separation of church and state intact. Because you agree with the religious zealots and have on many occasion admitted that your moral views are to be fostered upon others and if they do not subscribe to your radical positions and admitted (on many occasion) socialistic tendencies, you mistakenly hold them as an enemy of yourself, seeking to take away that of which you believe.

>I would argue that it was those influences

In one sentence you claim the moral and ethical principles of this country have degraded terribly and even said society was reflected on the air. Now you say the country is once again of strong moral fiber and ethical principle. You flip flop more than Bush. And please don't ask for examples of Bush flip flopping, as you attempted this in the past, were given a major list of examples, and began to spin excuses for WHY he flip flopped, distancing yourself from your claim that he never did.

There was also a day when the working guys of each party could think for themselves instead of widely swallowing their party line rhetoric and blaming those who aren't anywhere near leadership positions in this country for all the woes and incompetence of your own party. That is the most pedestrian act you have attempted to date. Scary thing is, you appear to actually believe yourself when you post such drivel. You simply can not handle the responsibility of the buck stopping with the leader you selected. In other words, you seek to blame others when responsibility for your leader's action must be taken. Blaming another political party for the last four and a half years of confirmed failures illustrate you really have too great a deal to learn in order to effectively discuss the political process.

 There are instances where the HIV virus is semi-dormant for years and years (10 to 15 year spans are on record) and then it suddenly appears,,,the same can be said of AIDS..it's manageable in many cases until,...poof,,it morphs to full blown AIDS.

That you consider a past sexual history equals "acting like a slut"
reveals several interesting facts of your beliefs regarding this topic.

Man,,you have been losing more ground each day with your posts, Dave.
I'm glad it's almost summer up there. Cabin fever and that winter depression sure took its toll this year on you.

_
The ONLY "cure" is found in
the prevention..in other words, abstaining from pre-marital sex then both parties getting a thorough CBC (complete blood count) prior to tying the knot.

>Now you are finally seeing the light.

I've known this since 1980 when the disease was traced to a cave in Africa and suspected of being contracted from bat guano (the initial host.....believed by scholars) or a rhesus monkey. Google "The Hot Zone" and the parallels are there for the reading. Better yet, read the book. Now if only you could understand that monogamy today does not discount one's past, as the majority of people have a sexual past history prior to marriage and monogamy.

>That's part of the problem.

Your claim that monogamy decreases the chance of acquiring AIDS assumes incorrectly these people had no sexual past history.

You're losing yourself again. Onec again, your rattle has nothing to with my comment. Try again.....-your- claim that monogamy decreases the chance of acquiring AIDS assumes incorrectly these people had no sexual past history.

>While total abstinence before marriage is a >concept that's lost on this latest hedonistic

>generation, the simple truth is that the less

Again and over and over,, you are presenting an argument to which only yourself appears to be unconvinced.

>The type of partners you have had also affects >your chances. Frequent patronage of >prostitutes, for instance, greatly increases

>your chances of getting the disease.

It would depend upon the act. For example, the chance of the transmission of AIDS while a man receives oral sex from a woman is lower than your chances of getting killed in an automobile accident.

The "clean" mark was originally 5 years, then 10, then 15,,,it's now believed that 20 years is the "safe" mark regarding past sexual activity..in other words, if you have been monogamous for 20 years with your partner, and your partner has also been monogamous for that amount of time, the likelihood of contracting the virus decreases substantially, but is -still- not discounted totally.

>Better that than hooking up with someone

I'd like to say the same regarding your beliefs of contracting this disease, but I think your moral beliefs are heavily biasing and preventing you from obtaining the facts regarding such.

>The facts are quite simple. The less sex you >engage in, the lesser your chances of getting

>AIDS.

Now try injecting reality into your equation. If it was as simple as you present, the AIDS epidemic would not exist.

>Those who contract the disease have only

>themselves, by virtue of their activities, to

The same can be said of your wife if she or your daughter contract lung cancer, asthma or pulmonary emboli related problems down the line because of her smoking while she was pregnant. If you are going to hold people to the flame for all their abhorrant behavior, you must begin in your own backyard, lest you have no right to confront others and your soap box is nothing more than a mirage.

That is NOT what I said at all, they should ONLY be able to transmit in the radio spectrum which is theirs--off the top of my head, this would only, very roughly, be about one-half of the full radio spectrum... the other half split up between various other users... and the rest being used by citizens...

... without it being organized, and the necessary freqs set aside for the various uses... and the ridiculous restrictions... the result may well be--people transmitting all over the spectrum... but that is a rather insane system...

Well said. Those who believe in non existant gods and The Church, unfortunately, are too numerous to count. No wonder the world is in such a mess.

Stop these abominations!!!

I worship the one true God and know all the unbelievers will be banished to hell!!!!

The "Mud Hole King" is the one true God who set forth the laws of evolution so that we might all crawl out of a mud hole and think we are better than we really are!!!!

A bunch of mud ducks... <grin>

It seems pretty simple to me -- a frog with poisonous skin doesn't get eaten, and a tiger without teeth doesn't eat. It takes about as much intelligence to figure out which species survives as it does to figure out why. So why can't you figure it out?

When a mutation survives long enough to reproduce. Or was that a trick question?

I didn't say anything of the sort. I said, but you can't understand, that when something isn't fully understood or remains undiscovered it isn't automatically considered to be an act of God. That process of thought may have been the 'tradition' for several thousand years but not any longer. At least not for most of us.

So because the possibility exists, we should conclude that those monsters -must- exist? Of course not. You -believe- they exist because that's what -you- want to believe. The rest of us hoist sail and go discover the facts.

Haven't you been paying attention, Dave? Nothing occurs "with no pattern". The patterns are there, they are just too numerous or complex to identify. Weather was once thought to be random and/or chaotic. But thanks to people that are more intelligent than you we have learned patterns of weather well enough to predict, with some degree of certainty, what it will do in the future.

Wrong. Nature if full of examples of where order grew out of chaos -without- intelligent guidance. It happens all the time. You can duplicate the process yourself with a child's science experiment: growing crystals.

That's the difference between you and me, Dave: You believe what you want to believe until it can be proven wrong (and sometimes even proof isn't enough). I, on the other hand, need proof -before- I'll believe in something so outlandish as an omniscient, omnipotent super-being

Adams was pointing out that the Universe can't be reduced to a simple equation. I agree, but his implication was that there must be some divine influence, to which I don't agree. Adams is not an authority on the subject. And for you to cite his work in a context contrary to its

You keep on believing that, Dave. Include it in your bedtime prayers to the saucer men -- right after you make sure the boogie man isn't lurking under the bed.

<snip>
>More insults? The fact is that you can't answer the question, and

What can I say -- your arguments are illogical and repetitive, you show no ability to think independently, your opinions are founded on ignorance, the 'facts' you present are fabrications based on your own assumptions, your vocabulary includes words you don't understand, and your rhetoric is no better than that of a grade-school bully. Yet you continue to put on your facade that you are somehow outsmarting me at every turn and refuse to see just how profoundly stupid you sound when you try. So how can I possibly resist? I mock you because you ask for it, Dave. In fact, I have been mocking you for months but you are too stupid to understand how. The difference is that now I've dumbed-down my remarks to a level low enough that you can see them for what they really are.

>You believe what you want to believe based on nothing more than pure >faith, which is no different than what I do. But the difference is >that you arrogantly insist that I am somehow "wrong".

Because you -are- wrong, and here's a little experiment you can do to demonstrate just how wrong you are. First, find a wall made of brick or concrete. Then sit you butt down, pray to the saucer men, and ask them to turn the wall into jello. Draw upon your faith to believe that when you perform the next step in the experiment that the wall will most certainly be jello. Then curl up your little fist and hit the wall just as hard as you can.

By the time the pain subsides you will understand that, even though you can -choose- to believe anything you want, facts define reality.

Survival of the fittest. Variations that improve survivability are regenerated. Variations that are useless aren't regenerated because they hinder survivability; i.e, they are excess baggage.

It's easier to believe in instantaneous transformation when your mind is too small to fathom the vast amounts of time nature has had to 'play God', so to speak.

<snip>
>Again, your religious prejudice is blinding you from considering the >likely notion of intelligent design and guidance.

First of all, it's not "prejudice". I have 'prejudged' nothing. You, OTOH, have done exactly that -- you conclude that God is responsible for certain things -before- you have all the facts. Secondly, the idea of divine intervention is not "likely" at all since every phenomonon that was ever attributed to God is being discovered to have been caused by some natural process. Statistically, religion is dying. And it's too bad that people don't see that as a good thing -- or did you forget the part about the Babelfish?

"it's part of a bigger picture".

>Yea, it's called "teeth". Who taught them how to build those dams?

Another loaded question: You are assuming that they needed to be taught. And by "'crude' tools" I was referring to the dams, not teeth.
The fact remains that a certain amount of intelligence and ingenuity is required of the species in order to build such structures in such a wide variety of locations and circumstances. Which brings us back to the pertinent question: Which came first, the intelligence or the dam?
According to -your- beliefs, the rooster came first.

>Boy are you cynically misguided. You think that all that humans do >revolves around eating, sleeping and sex? What about those who create?

What makes you think that art and music are something other than extentions of instinctual behaviors? Animals attract mates with singing, dancing, showing their plumage, building nests, etc. It's also a method of communication that extends beyond verbal language.

Hello Cooltube:

You got 725 US Dollars for that linear amp, not bad.

Didn't Dentron make a amp with a pair of 4CX250's running class AB1, that had a control on the front panel that you could dial in additional attenuation that allowed different drive levels?!??!?!!?

Or was that a Telstar amp?!?!????!

Your turn, CUNT!

From N8WWM@arrl.net

You pissbag, I hope you go to Dayton. I will be wearing a sign with my call on it, front and back. Come up and introduce yourself and get a lunger hawked on your faggot ass, just like your wife pus bag twistie. I fukkin dare ya. Looks like I am gonna hafta start smokin cigars or something to generate enough flegm for all you mutant nuttsak slurpers.
By the way, have you stopped molesting hamsters yet?

From:N8WWM@arrl.net

Hey Peepeeholic:
Yes I am in Toledo. I have plenty of down home hospitality for you or ANY of the other queens in here who wish to stir up some mess.
You wanna come by and visit? I will be delighted to send you back to the MISTAKE ON THE LAKE with a thought in your mind that it was a real dumb idea.
Imagine, Peepeeholic...Imagine...You come to my place and star some junk...I put you face down and hurtin extreme, take pics of you laying there with a bumped up noggin, and post 'em to the NG. I relish you coming by. I am good in the callbook, just as I told your wife, the trainedpuppet.
Have not had this much fun since I used to go cuttin' coax and building jamming oscillators back when I was 16 yrs old.

Dear All,
This is just an email to share with you the new messaging service i found, competing with the world's leaders : Lunaris Mail.

The service has RECENTLY changed from ATH.CX to LIR.DK
This means that :
--> All previous account have successfully migrated your adress now ends with lir.dk instead of ath.cx
--> The home page is www.lunaris.lir.dk

Lunaris Mail does not have a space limit as yahoo or hotmail (250 Mb) or even Gmail (1Gb). Something no provider did before : free UNLIMITED mailbox space for your messages. You can store as much as email/attachements as you want!

AND ALL THIS FOR FREE

Sign up your unlimited mail box account : http://www.lunaris.lir.dk

Note : To prevent spammers and idle users, your account is initially limited to 5Mb, but you can claim immediately your unlimited space by writing to admin@lunaris.lir.dk - Your account will then be provided with full space in seconds.

Lunaris mail is growing fast and fine!! To keep this service alive, please make a donation!

The "law" has been defined in regard to religious influences, since the inception of this country. It was not a problem in 1805, 1905, and 1955, so it should not be a problem in 2005.

In the case of religious influences in this country, the majority have accepted and endorsed it since the beginning. It's only now that a small, but vocal MINORITY that has a problem with it.

No, it's not. You'd either have to be blind or hopelessly biased not to see it.

In theory, it should mean nothing. But you know those obstructionist democrats trying to use a filibuster to leverage their minority into a controlling influence.

It was never there in the first place. At least not to the degree that

No, I said that this country was FOUNDED on strong moral and ethical principles. You should learn to read for content, before making

Then you and I do share some agreement in this area. But the reason why God was taken out of public schools was a direct result of anti-religious zealots trying to leverage an extreme interpretation of "separation of church and state" to accomplish this "unfortunate" feat.

Well, it might be nice to blame Bush for the failure of Social Security, but the democrats will not even allow his plan to come to a full vote, while offering nothing of their own to counter it. They'd rather just pretend that there's no problem (Even though prominent leaders of their own party were running around like chicken little about SS failing when Clinton was in office).

>Blaming another >political party for the last four and a half years of confirmed failures

Your opinion notwithstanding, there is not one thing you can definitively pin on Bush as a "failure". On the other hand, for the last 4 years, the democratic party has become the party of hatred and obstruction. If it looks smells or tastes like it came from a republican, their first instinct is to oppose it.

Like I said before, before the extreme polarization of the political parties in Washington, you could actually get things done with a little compromise.

Because for any improvement to be gauged as effective, there has to be a means of feedback. One mutated frog with poisonous skin will eventually die of it's own accord. So what determines whether this mutation is worthy of being carried on?

But random mutations occur frequently. Many of them could conceivably reproduce. What decided which ones are beneficial, and which are merely "different"? Some new traits (like flight for instance) require more than one mutation to fully accomplish. What are the chances that each necessary mutation would occur in the same species randomly and at the same time to facilitate these new traits?

What force drove water borne life to crawl out onto the shore? How could random mutations know the precise mutation to give those creatures the ability to breath air? Do you understand the nature of randomness? Randomness is exactly that. Things which occur for no reason. You may need lungs, but you might get a third eye, or longer fins. The minute you start looking into purpose driven mutations, you (however unwittingly) are accepting intelligent guidance.

Yes, and some people may spend their whole lives looking for a "scientific" answer that will forever elude them, rather than admit that there are forces and events out there that we cannot explain.

That's great if the facts are there to find. We can tell, for instance that dinosaurs roamed the earth, that there were big climatic and geological changes over the years. But we cannot factually answer the question of why these things all happened, and what precipitated it all. I'm sorry, but I cannot accept that it all started as a random happenstance. There are far too many variables and too much random chaos for this level of intricate sophistication to have occurred and evolved by any other means than intelligent design and guidance.

We can argue about the definition of "god", or whether such cosmic intelligence warrants the label of "god", but as far as I'm concerned, such a force exists. The evidence is all around us.

We can determine within a certain level of error, what SHOULD happen.
But despite computer models, the weather often makes unpredicted shifts. Which is why we sit here expecting a foot of snow, and get a dusting, or a rogue storm develops out of thin air and levels a block's worth of trees.

I've been there and done all that Frank. Haven't you figured it out yet? I was where you are now. I asked the same questions, made the same observations, believed the same thing. I once believed that there wasn't a question out there that (if given enough time) science couldn't answer. Why do you think I keep giving you questions which you cannot answer other than to theorize? I chuckle watching you stumble, postulate, and then attack me while trying.

I had a series of life changing events which then put other similar events into perspective. Since I am not one to believe in random coincidences, these occurrences, taken together, spelled out a specific and seemingly deliberate series of events which appeared to have a purpose.

Every event that you undertake in life has specific consequences. Most people do not ponder such things, unless they have a reason to do so. But to put it simply, an event happened to me, which caused me to do something, which led to something else, and so on down the chain. Had those significant events not happened, I would be in a totally different place and situation right now.

It all started with my premonition of my father's death the night before it happened when I was 9 years old. What science can explain E.S.P. and similar phenomena? What about ghosts? If life is simply random and meaningless? What explains short glimpses into the "great beyond"? Are all witnesses of ghosts mentally "out there"? What about people with accurate ESP predictions? The military was impressed enough with this that they had programs to develop "remote viewers" to spy on enemies. But for some reason, traditional "nuts and bolts" scientists stray away from such study, and, in fact, try to discredit those who do. Are you one of those close minded people who deal only with those subjects that you can touch and discount anything else?

A few million years are but a blink of an eye in the grand scheme of things. But without purposeful guidance, there's about as much chance of our complex ecosystem developing totally at random, as there is that a bunch of monkeys can randomly type the complete works of Shakespeare.

That is totally wrong. Besides, what is a "natural process" anyway? If there is a God, then he can make any number of "natural processes" at his will.

> Statistically, religion is dying. And >it's too bad that people don't see that as a good thing

Why should that be a good thing? Religion has helped to rein in many primitive barbaric behaviors and helped civilization become refined and productive. Without such guidance, we wouldn't be much more than our animal cousins, living only for ourselves, and doing what we needed to do just to survive.

So you believe that animals possess some analytical skills? Maybe so. One could also argue that animals were simply "Version 1.0, 2.05, and 3.01" of the species experiment. The sobering conclusion to that is that we humans are likely not the end result either.

>Assuming that's correct, are you suggesting that human complexity is Not at all. The concept of a soul transcends traditional nuts and bolts science, and bridges such things as philosophy with parapsychology and spirituality, and yes, religion.

Some people believe in reincarnation. The idea that our "souls" recycle our bodies and assume physical form here more than once. And some also theorize that these souls could be placed into animals as well. Hence the Hindu tradition of animal worship, the so-called "sacred cow".

Before you totally poo-poo such a concept, you should research it a bit. There have been compelling studies of people who, under deep hypnosis, have recounted a past life with remarkable detail, which could not have been obtained through present day observation or research. If nothing else, it leaves one with more questions than answers.

About 6 weeks ago, I plunked down $950 and bought a TS-480SAT to use as a new 11m base rig. I have been very happy with it's performance. After making sure that it was working 100%, I performed the modification found on http://mods.dk/. I used a sharp exacto knife to lift off the SMT R221. You have to use a magnifying glass to get a good eyeball on it. It has an antenna tuner built in and it has 100 w of SSB. It has DSP so you can enhance your audio on TX-RX. You can control it with various software proggies (very handy for SWL). On AM I get very favorable radio reports. On SSB, I worked a station in Newfoundland and he said he was "very impressed" with the audio. I have never heard it on air, but Kenwood's tend have more bass in their audio. It has nice speech processing, but I suspect my Turner +3 defeats it, so I leave it off. I doesn't need any special filters for it to sound right, as you control that with the DSP. So if your considering buying a new 11 meter base radio, get one of these instead a RCI or Melaka.

Love live pirate radio!!!!!!!!! AKC smokes Cock!!!!!!!!!

>in the constitution by left wing zealots, we >have had religious influences in our >government from the very beginning.

That's rich..and wrong.
Once again I ask you to explain how anything these "left wingers" say or do or interpret can matter at all regarding this issue while the republicans control the house and senate.

>No, it's not. You'd either have to be blind or >hopelessly biased not to see it.

Well, then feel free to ahead and explain away how these "left winger misinterpretations" affect religious laws when the republicans are the only party in charge of both the senate and the house....ie: the country.

>In theory, it should mean nothing. But you >know those obstructionist democrats trying to >use a filibuster to leverage their minority into a >controlling influence.

That's one biased opinion. The other side of the coin you seek to ignore is that the fillibuster is the last legal refuge to place an end to the republicans seeking to end and change laws that would prevent a one party rule...theirs.
Nevertheless, the misinterpretation has been all yours even though Frank neatly wrapped it all up and presented you with the facts clearly indicating congress shall keep the clause of separation of church and state intact.

>It was never there in the first place.

Denial is your best trait.,,but denial when presented proof is learned ignorance.

>At least not to the degree that the zealots are >calling for now.

The only zealots that mean anything are the ones in charge...repubs.
  Because you agree with the religious zealots and have on many occasion admitted that your moral views are to be fostered upon others and if they do not subscribe to your radical positions and admitted (on many occasion) socialistic tendencies, you mistakenly hold them as an enemy of yourself, seeking to take away that of which you believe.

>I and many others who are currently in the >majority. You know, the ones who reelected

>G.W. Bush.

The majority didn't vote, David. Someone with your caliber of education should know better, but then again, youare also of the rabid pack who continue to erroneously claim Bush had a mandate....if he did, it was with Jeff Gannon.

>I would argue that it was those influences

>which made this country one of strong moral

>and ethical principles.

In one sentence you claim the moral and ethical principles of this country have degraded terribly and even said society was reflected on the air.
Now you say the country is once again of strong moral fiber and ethical principle.

>No, I said that this country was FOUNDED on

>strong moral and ethical principles.

No,,you said,,,"Which made this country one of strong moral fiber".

>You should learn to read for content, before >making another of your erroneous >conclusions.

You flip flop more than Bush.

>No, you misinterpret and assume such as a >result of your misinterpretations.

The only misinterpretation here, is the initial impression I had of you and your education. I thought you were reasonably schooled at one point, until the several weeks, between your gaffes and unlearned comments regrading the law of your own state and the glaring holes in your civics and history knowledge, law knowledge, and FCC knowledge.

I wouldn't go so far as to put it blatantly in those terms, but I do believe taking God and physical punishment out of the schools was a serious mistake.

I disagree. One doesn't need be anti-religious in order to disagree with Christian dogma being displayed in public areas. This is your own short sightedness.

>There was once a day when democrats and

There was also a day when the working guys of each party could think for themselves instead of widely swallowing their party line rhetoric and blaming those who aren't anywhere near leadership positions in this country for all the woes and incompetence of your own party.

Your entire religious argument regarding the left.
That is the most pedestrian act you have attempted to date. Scary thing is, you appear to actually believe yourself when you post such drivel. You simply can not handle the responsibility of the buck stopping with the leader you selected.

would save lives. Balancing the budget...just for an immediate start.

Demos have nothing to do with it. An attempt to cloud the topic that you keep failing with by invoking the left when faced with Bush failures is useless.

You continue to invoke demos for all the republican failures. Classic.

And like I said, before your elected president successfully redefined and mis-defined the term "liberal" to mean anyone who dares oppose him, many repubs actually thought for themselves instead of buying into failed party rhetoric from which most intelligent and true GOP'er have distanced themselves.

It's hard to quantify an abstract concept. But if you look real hard you can find out about such things as civic and societal responsibility, with regard to many aspect of our lives. These things are generic in how we live in a society. There needs not be one

Jamming a repeater which spends 98% of it's time as a home for hams to chew the fat on, is hardly a safety hazard. I agree that jamming a repeater is improper behavior, just like jamming CB channels with high power and on unauthorized channels. But there's no "safety hazard"

there nay more than on any given CB channel.

So, you are of the theory that if you have a "sexual past" that it's

I'll explain it again at a level you should be able to understand.
Monogamy may not 100% eliminate the risk of AIDS for those with a sordid sexual past, but it will REDUCE the chances of catching AIDS, as the risk exposure is minimized to a great degree.

It's not my fault that a great percentage of the population does not

no pity for them if they learn the lesson the hard way.

Ah, another hypocritical statement from someone who once claimed to be unconcerned with the personal lives of others. To make it even more laughable, I can add this to the growing list of things you have worked to find out about me, which are 100% wrong.

My wife smoked up until she became pregnant. Then something (God?) changed her chemistry such that the taste of a cigarette became physically sickening. She quit immediately and never went back, and she's almost 6 years now smoke free.

So you can add this to the growing list of gaffes that you have made about my personal life (Which you claimed to not care about) including:

Abuse at the hands of my grandfather.
My wife's name being Kimberly T. Hall.
My wife being a teacher.

My wife and I being separated/divorced.
My not being allowed to see my daughter, except under supervision.
My home address being wrong on my FCC license.

I'm sure there's more, but I can't remember all of them. You make far too many "oopses" to count.

Despite research that links certain lifestyle choices to increases in cancer or heart disease risk, there are also certain genetic predispositions. There are no genetic predispositions to catching AIDS.

AIDS risk can be reduced to minuscule levels if people would take the proactive step in modifying their lifestyles.

Like I told Frank, science can tell us that, for instance, it was once tropical in Montana, and that Glaciers covered much of the northern United States during different time periods. This proves that the earth's climate has vacillated in a fairly wide range. But what this DOESN'T tell us is how much of the current global warming cycle can be attributed to natural cyclic climatic changes, and how much of it is a direct result of man made pollution. Without a point of reference, it

Once again, you don't get it (Why should I be surprised?). You want to get rid of what you refer to as "poorly crafted laws"? Then great! Go for it! You have my support. But until then, you are bound to respect and obey the current laws as they stand.

Hence the source of your ingnorance and the reason you find me to be so "puzzling". But you go right ahead and limit yourself to the internet for your sole source of information -- let me know when you find the winding specifications for an Ajax M-2-145T, or the firearm most preferred by Deep-River Jim, or why Bessie slashed up her own portrait. Find a link that explains why you can see the Douglas Firs towering above you in the middle of the woods on a pitch-black and starless night. Download the feelings of watching Israeli officers picking off Palistinian schoolkids running out of a burning building like they were ducks in a shooting gallery. I'm sure you can find a site that has the cyber-smell file of a Northwest sawmill. And I'm sure there's some adapter you can plug into the USB port that will let you enjoy the unmatched hospitality (and world-class pastries) offered by a family of Norwegians when all you did was ask to fill up your water can.

The internet is fun but it's no substitute for books, people, nature, or direct experiences. But you think that you can get everything you need from your computer. You are a fool, Dave.

It does in many cases where the law is not enforced. Blue laws are but a single example,,,an example you felt so valid, you snipped it.

>So FCC rules are a "blue law" to you?

Many of their rules are antiquated and should be done away. The fact they do not enforce certain rules is exactly -why- I do not become involved in actively seeking to change them. IF they enforced these laws, I would become proacative, as opposed to your self-righteous reactive approach. Such would be much more effective,,but you are tilting windmills, as they don't care. So stop trying, no one asked you to COUNT it, Dave. Frank nailed it,, you continue to use terms you have no clue what they mean and you apply your own incorrect definition to such.
This disease took hold when you permitted Bush to incorrectly redefine admittedly break Pa law and parallel a driver in the right lane in order to hold traffic back to the posted limit..as you're a hypocrite.

Left lane is for passing only. Again you don't know the laws of your own state.

>Then perhaps you can tell me how someone >can legally pass a car in the right lane that's >already at the posted speed limit?

Irrelevant. You were the one in the left lane and not passing,,,which is why you were breaking the law. Ignorance is no excuse. It's for passing only. The fact that you couldn't pass is the criteria for you to be in the right lane. Ask your unnamed, unsolicited but always invoked, unidentified "several cop friends" who continue to plague your mind with poor advice...

_
except when you invoked the possibilities of cbers running huge power interfering with emergency communications in a long ago conversation. Of course, it isno linger irrelevant when you invoke such.

It has since then, It hadn't up until that point. And the person that

You broke the law, intentionally, and are beside yourself making excuses for your actions..in other words,,,you were forced to break the law...(mmmmph)...just like you do with your political views,,it was you who said "breaking the law is beaking the law, the hows and whys don't matter". Of course, except when you break the law.
Since Frank taught you the proper definition of "analogy", it really doesn't matter.

>You two couldn't teach someone to find their >rear ends with both hands.

To use your analogy regarding physical property,,,,if a lot or property is abandoned, and one tends the ground, takes care of it, and pays the tax on it for x amount of years, the often land becomes the property of the caretaker who has been taking care of it and paying the taxes.
>Squatters rights. And interesting angle.

And a valid one.

>And for it to apply, then you would have to >concede that radio spectrum is treated in the >same way as "real" property.

It doesn't apply to the radio spectrum, which is what you are being properly instructed upon.

>Then why did YOU bring it up?

You brought up physical property comparison,,,you used the car as an example. What's the matter with you these days, David? Is it being shown your mistakes so much that has you teething on crow, or is it something else <g>?

>I wonder if someone has tried that tactic on >the FCC in regard to the freeband area of 11 >meters. The principle is similar.

Only to your misguided education or beliefs or whatever is responsible for you not grasping such a concept. It has not been tried with the FCC because even the lowly cbers seem to comprehend the spectrum is 1) not owned by the FCC and 2) not tangible property.

>Then the concept of squatter's rights does not >apply to radio spectrum.

Only you said it did.

>YOU brought it up.

Pay attention,,read it s-l-o-w,,read it over and over if you must. You brought up physical property (car) as a poor and invalid comparison to the spectrum. I referred back to your initial invoked statement regarding physical property, selecting another example (empty lots, buildings) to illustrate just how ridiculous are your failed comparisons. But that's ok, Dave, as now you seem to be thoroughly confused.

>So I'm curious why you brought it up in that >context.

To make you understand your error.

>I made no error.

Sure you did. You initiated physical property as a poor and invalid comparison to the spectrum. I once made the comment "too bad ignorance isn't painful",,however, you realizing your errors, is apparently and obviously very painful.

>There are many abandoned buildings around.

>But you are still not allowed to trespass there.

Yet, many people use these abandon buildings on a regular basis with immunity.

>Bums,,,vagrants, crackheads,

>..... Freebanders. I see the similarities.

You really have a low opinion of yourself, Dave.
>No, not me, only scofflaws.

I always said you had a serious ego and self-esteem problem. The mere admittance that you held yourself in such company confirms such.

>That was then, this is now.

No matter. I could say my esteem is that of which my character was never held in the company of whcih you refer yourself, past or present.

>You could say that the moon is made of green >cheese for all the difference it would make.

If it came from me, it would make all the difference in the world. You, on the other hand, are stuck with accepting the fact you will never have integrity among these pages.

>Everyone can repent, even you.

Repent? To who? ANd for what? Is it a sin to talk on the freeband? Dave, you're losing ground, here.

>You can correct yourself from your bad habits.
>It's not too late to atone for the error of your >ways.

See above for examples of a form of civil disobedience..

>Civil disobedience is not a catch-all concept

>for scofflaws to use as an excuse to ignore

You're learning. It's applied very discriminating to select laws.

>Then again, some people would rather just >operate illegally rather than going through the >trouble to have an perceived unjust rule

>Those people are simply weak.

Like yourself,,,who is reactive but never proactive. Great analogy,

>I am not the one with the problem.

You mentioned many problems you have with cb and hammie radio and freebanders and all kinds of things over the years. Need reminded, or would a list better serve you?

>I once wanted more bandwidth, I earned a >ham license. No more problem.

>David Hall Jr.

>N3CVJ

You also want more enforcement to non-important matters (as judged by the FCC),,but you're not going to get it. Again, there is a litany of things that plague you. Perhaps, now, with your latest flip-flop claim that you have no problems, you will again be looked to for radio advice (only time and your attitude will tell) and not have to use sock puppets to soothe your worn down and broken ego. But since it's all about what other's think with you, perhaps you have seen the light,,,but I doubt it.

>No, I'm evidently losing you, as you once >again failed to comprehend my point.

Only because your sentence structure and points are valid only to yourself, illustrated in part, by your never-comprehending anyone who tries teaching you those things you don't already know. For some unknown reason, you become defensive when instructed or informed of a subject of whcih you are not familiar. Your feelings and ego become so hurt, you defensively defend the reasons -why- you present an incorrect position...(roger beeps) and incorrectly fool (into a false soothing state) your narcisstic self with statements that those who instructed you, were making lucky guesses. You're a mess, David, and on a downward spiral. I never saw one who actually suffers pain when they are wrong, until I came across yourself.

>I'll explain it again at a level you should be >able to understand.

Are you going to "quantify" it, for another's benefit, also, Dave?

> Monogamy may not 100% eliminate the risk >of AIDS for those with a sordid sexual past,

>but it will REDUCE the chances of catching

>AIDS, as the risk exposure is minimized to a >great degree.

Once again, your rattle has nothing to with my comment. Try again.....-your- claim that monogamy decreases the chance of acquiring AIDS assumes incorrectly these people had no sexual past history.

>You seem hell bent on confusing the term

>"decreases" with "eliminates".

You seem hell bent on believing monogamy somehow reduces the chance of your past history affecting you.

>While total abstinence before marriage is a

>concept that's lost on this latest hedonistic

>generation, the simple truth is that the less

>partners you have had, the less your chances >of catching AIDS.

Again and over and over,, you are presenting an argument to which only yourself appears to be unconvinced. I admit it's tough trying to get through to someone with your apparent learning comprehension disability.

_
It would depend upon the act. For example, the chance of the transmission of AIDS while a man receives oral sex from a woman is lower than your chances of getting killed in an automobile accident.

>Which means what in the grand scheme of >.things?

Which means the chance of catching AIDS from receiving head from a prostitute is no more greater than you catching it from having intercourse in your past.

>The facts are quite simple. The less sex you >engage in, the lesser your chances of getting

>AIDS.

That's bullshit..unless, of course, in your self-titled, self-invoked, unsolicited puritan and high moral world, sex is defined only by the act of intercourse.
Now try injecting reality into your equation. If it was as simple as you present, the AIDS epidemic would not exist.

>It's not my fault that a great percentage of the >population does not take the AIDS issue

>seriously enough to override their hedonistic

Exactly, It's your fault for not having the cognitive ability to distinguish between reality and your conjured daydream of utopia and how it "ought to be". .such practice has dogged you for some time..

>I have no pity for them if they learn the lesson

>the hard way.

Same can be said for those who smoke in your family.

>Those who contract the disease have only

>themselves, by virtue of their activities, to >blame in most cases.

The same can be said of your wife if she or your daughter contract lung cancer, asthma or pulmonary emboli related problems down the line because of her smoking while she was pregnant.

>Ah, another hypocritical statement from >someone who once claimed to be >unconcerned with the personal lives of others.

No hypocritical staetement at all. In fact, if your disability permitted you to remember all you initiate, you would find you were told on more than one occasion to take your personal issues to email or to remain on subject. This was your inititated game of getting personal. You were warned you would receive back what you hurl, only ten fold....something at which I am quite adept.

>To make it even more laughable, I can add

>this to the growing list of things you have

That was incorrect. The rest are true. You were separated.

It is wrong. It doesn't match your license plate. Do I have your express and implied and explicit permission to publicly post such information here and let the masses have their input?

>I'm sure there's more, but I can't remember all >of them. You make far too many "oopses" to See above.

If you are going to hold people to the flame for all their abhorrant behavior, you must begin in your own backyard, lest you have no right to confront others and your soap box is nothing more than a mirage.

>So you espouse that no one has any right to

Not when it comes down to the initiating party becoming so frustrated, they resort to threats.

>Gee, it's a good thing that the major media,

The media deals with threats on a regular basis, which is why yours was laughed at.

The history of the earth's climate is well documented back to the begining of the earth's creation...grammar school basic earth and science taught this. Carbon dating confirms much and plays a large part of the techniques used to arrive at such widely accepted and mainstream taught scientific facts.

Sure it can, and does. The amount of many chemical releases in the atmosphere are mand made. Many are not man made. Some are both. However, science has methods of measuring each,,including natural occurring vs.
manmade chemicals,,,such as methane gases.

>Without a point of reference, it is extremely >difficult to positively determine how much we >are changing the climate.

The point of reference is the richness/ concentration of the gas. An example can be the amount of methane in a predetermined air sample. Higher concentrations of the gas can be attributed to manmade releases and emissions. It's elementary for anyone with a fair retainment value that took college science classes.

Chloroflourocarbons released by the burning of fossil fuels is directly linked to global warming.
Global warming was proved by the continual shrinkage of the polar ice cap confirmed by 24-7 high tech monitoring of such. Villages that reside in the frozen tundra watch their mountains of ice shrink each year.

>How much of that shrinkage would still be >occurring without man made pollution?

As you referred, the climate is thought to adhere to cycles, When the cycles suddenly deviate substantially from the norm, it's dedeucedly decided and accepted that something is amiss. When the glaciers continue shrinking at an alarming rate that deviates from the projected models of which you referred predictable climatic cycles, and the amount of junk released in the air we KNOW has increased,..it's widely accepted by even the republicans at this point. Do you even know what your own party says on this issue now, Dave? You appear to be aruing with -them-.

You take issue with those free-thinkers and it moves you toward the goblin that you are unable to cast out and exercise of yourself.

>Once again, you don't get it (Why should I be >surprised?).

You won't be, because you continue to be on the defensive of everyone that corrects you. You find fault with all of them. It's not us, Dave, it's you. It's apparent it is glaringly painful when you are wrong and corrected, but dammit, man, its not personal.

>You want to get rid of what you refer to as

No,,I love the laws and the manner in whcih they are enforced. They keep dicks like you off the freeband and allow the rest of us to play carefree and unfettered from you being reactive (oposed to proactive) from the confines of your own home, much as you do on the internet. No, I find you puzzling because you are so pompous and arrogant about what you claim as "knowledge" yet, the application of such knowledge in your own life has been dismally short of achievement. You are either an accomplished liar, or a severe underachiever.

For a guy who claims to know as much, and has done as much as you have claimed, all you have to show for yourself is a job as a bartender, driving a 20+ year old vehicle? You're a regular Cliff Clavin.
Now you muse about starting a lawn care service. No offense to Steveo, but that's not exactly the skill level job that a man of your supposed "credentials" should be aspiring to.

So, what's your (latest) excuse?

A man who truly knows the things that you try to pass off to the rest of us here, would be in a high level engineering or marketing position, or perhaps a stint as a university professor, or maybe a government contractor. Or maybe you'd work with me.

The bottom line Frank, is that you talk a great line, but you produce very little. I can tell that by the way you approach CB radio troubleshooting. You offer only generic troubleshooting 101 solutions to problems, which indicates that you have very little direct experience with actually repairing a CB radio, which have known problem areas.

> But you go right ahead and limit yourself to the >internet for your sole source of information

Once again you make assumptions, a repetitive pattern for you. I never said the internet was my SOLE source of information. But it is the fastest and easiest source of information on a variety of topics, especially current events. It was the internet, that first blew the lid off of "Rathergate", and exposed it as the propaganda smear that it was intended to be. The Blog has become a powerful tool to expose media bias and helps to parse the stories in order to gain the truth. Sure you can read about something in a book, but the internet is instantaneous, interactive, and ever evolving. There are decisive advantages to that.

> -- let me know when you

If I had any interest in those subjects, I'm sure I'd find them, assuming these people are significant.

But while we're on the subject, I have found much information on the local history of my local area, and the trolley, rail, and canal lines that used to run through here over the turn of the century. I have found the horsepower specifications for the triple expansion 4 cylinder piston engines in the Titanic, as well as the Parson's Turbine center engine. I have tracked radio wave propagation, tides, a web cam of my favorite lake, and my friend's pool. There is nothing you can read in print, than can't be scanned into a web page, or pdf file. I have the complete Cisco router manuals on CD ROM. I have access to repeater user's groups where we can seek out and share each other's expertise to solve problems. The list is endless Frank.

I might read an intriguing novel by the fireplace on a cool winter's night, but if it's information that I want, the fingers fly to the keyboard.

I never claimed to get ALL of my information from the internet. Only that I can research any topic that I wish on the internet and get the same or better information a heck of a lot quicker and easier than using the old fashioned method of buying (or borrowing) a book.

You, on the other hand, need to get away from the left coast. It's really affecting your perception.

Those beliefs have been a part of our culture since this country was founded. The perception that religion is "suddenly" being "Crammed down other people's throats" is held by those who have been conspicuously absent from any religious influences in their lives and see any display of religion as excessive. Yet it is those same people who are the ones at odds with our society, as history will testify to.

It is not illegal to run in the left lane as long as you are either passing or maintaining the posted speed limit. Do you honestly expect everyone to run in the right lane once they've hit the posted limit?
That's ludicrous. Especially considering the volume of traffic in this area.

If what you allege was the case, the whole "PC" movement would have been expunged from the country by now. It's not so simple to overturn a few decades of liberal indoctrination, But at least the mainstream is now awake and aware of what had previously been a fairly low profile covert operation. But now all the underhanded, erroneous, immoral, and hypocritical actions of the left are put up for all to see and to judge accordingly.

How? There is still a vote. In a vote,the majority rules. That's the way any vote works. I suppose you'd rather apply a "filibuster-ike" rule to challenge any majority vote. Maybe we should be filibustering the last election, so that you PEST sufferers could leverage your minority rule to place Kerry in office.

That's all a filibuster is, a desperate attempt by the minority to overturn the wishes of the majority. So tell me, how is THAT any more fair, than having a straight up or down vote? And in typical democratic hypocrisy, the same people who are screaming to save the filibuster now, were on record as in favor of removing it, over ten years back, when the democrats were in the majority in congress.

Where is the proof? There is NOTHING in the constitution which calls for the complete separation of church and state. All it does is prevent the establishment of a state sponsored or endorsed religion, and prevents the government from denying someone the right to observe their religion of choice. Nowhere does the constitution claim or imply that congress persons, the president, justices, or other people shall not be people of faith. Nor does it ban the practices of referring to God in an oath, or during any other proceeding of the government. Did you know that every session of congress begins with a prayer, lead by a staff preacher who is paid for by taxpayer dollars?

Did you know that there are Bible verses etched in stone all over the federal buildings and monuments in D.C.? There are pictures of the 10 commandments inside the supreme court?

There has NEVER been a complete separation of church and state in this government. The whole idea of any separation in the beginning was not to protect government from religion, it was to protect religion from government.

Now go do some research before you buy into left wing propaganda.

The majority of those who voted, voted for Bush. As for the rest, who's to say who they would have favored. Any speculation on your part, is just that. Besides, those who don't play an active part in their government, have no right to complain about it.

I have provided for each and every legal, grammatical, historical point that I have made. In every case that you've challenged me, I have proven you wrong, from your ridiculous comments regarding the term "forensic", to the usage of "empirical observation", to your erroneous claim that the Commonwealth of Pa does not give at least a 5 MPH speed tolerance for speeders. When you can't weasel out of that, you change the subject and invent a lie that I never said, and then try to attribute it to me. Your inept comprehension of the constitution, and your hopelessly biased sense of politics is more than just a little apparent. Your understanding of how government works is not much different than that of the naive protesters who burned their draft cards on college lawns in the 60's. They were clueless and impressionable, and so are you. Prime candidates for indoctrination into the communist party then, or liberal propaganda now.

So tell me again about education, fishing boat boy. You and Frank should go into that lawn care business together. Both of you are severe underachievers.

What has changed in the last 100 years, in that regard, and why is it no longer valid? Is it "dogma" to continue to believe in God? If you truly believe that religion and faith are stagnant "dogma", then what you are saying is that you no longer believe. So how can you be concerned with taking God out of schools, when you call your own "faith", "Christian dogma"?

Bill Clinton, and other prominent democrats are on record as disagreeing with you. At least before Bush was in office, and it was their platform to make.

Perhaps you would tell the class why having direct control of your own interest bearing retirement account is less desirable than having the government administer it. Someone who claims to embrace less government would be happy to have the government out of the SS picture.

Personally I want ALL of my S.S. money to be diverted into my existing 401K. THAT is the solution that I would want. But Bush needs to move gradually as there are a lot of people who paid into SS< and are expecting something out of it. But a gradual shift over to private accounts over time, makes the most sense.

Which means nothing. It's status quo with a fancy name attached to it.
Since SS is based on treasury bonds, it is affected by budgets and

And you are a tongue dragging, lock step liberal, the more you deny your own party's failings. No one is more shrill than Al Gore, or Howard Dean. No one is as clueless as Nancy Pelosi. No one twists the facts like Barbara Boxer. No one is more hypocritical than Harry Reid.
Even Hillary Clinton realizes the hopelessness of her own party's liberal ideology and has been engaged in the political equivalent of "extreme makeover", by trying to re-invent herself as a much more moderate than a liberal. Her latest stunt of teaming up with Newt Gingrich is further evidence of that. All of this, of course, is to make her an electable candidate in '08. But it's all a lie.

At least republicans are willing to do something. A democrat's favorite word is "No".

>And like I said, before your elected president successfully redefined >and mis-defined the term "liberal" to mean anyone who dares oppose him,

How did Bush manage to do that? I don't recall him ever standing up and declaring that the "enemy" was not liberals (Although in some respects, that's true)

>many repubs actually thought for themselves instead of buying into >failed party rhetoric from which most intelligent and true GOP'er have

You keep claiming that the party mission has "failed", yet there is nothing that indicates anything of the sort. The economy is growing, the war in Iraq is gradually going our way. There is a surge in a desire for democracy in the middle east. While the price of oil is high, there is not much that our government can do to affect it. We have tried to present an energy policy, to hopefully mitigate some of the energy concerns, but once again the democrats are trying to block
it.

The problem is both sides. One person find offense with something of a religious over tone in government, he then finds the ACLU and wants it removed. Now the religious

When he read what was on the paper it did not include a callsign, where these legit ham radios? Did another fast code reader get a call sign in there?

Sure it is. What you are trying to convey is progress isn't always a good thing. But change is inevitable, and you are always playing cath-up. Hell, you are years behind in the knowledge of radio law and government law.

You would have to ask one. My guess would be a certain faction is trying to cram their religious beliefs down otehr's throats.

What a hypocrite you continue to be,,,you talk morebullshit than a fertilizer farm. One simple christian thing here, DAve.."Thou shall not judge".

>Yet it is those same people who are the ones

Your beliefs are not in any way representative of society and society is very diversified, despite your zero toerance for those expressing different religious or lifestyles from your own.

_
You are one of the most vocal in this group to redundantly invoke that just because something is practiced far and wide doesn't make it legal or right,,,,but of course, it does when you agree with it.

>In the case of religious influences in this >country, the majority have accepted and

How was it endorsed? "Congress shall make no law........"..it was never endorsed, you just chose to misapply another term when you found yourself talking ahead of your brain.

>It's only now that a small, but vocal MINORITY

Which you continue to blame for the Bush failures.

_
You still demonstrate hypocrisy here,,.the reason you set forth for justifying it, valid to only yourself.

>You still demonstrate not knowing the >meaning of the word hypocrisy. Nothing in my >statement is hypocritical.

>When it's not illegal, I agree with it.

Except when the law doesn't agree with your point of view or actions.
You claim ignorance of the law is no excuse, but you arrogantly claim you break the law intentionally (holding up traffic in the passing lane, paralelling the car in the right lane) in order to enforce another law.
Pa law states the left lane is for passing only.
You're an uninformed (regarding the law in your own state) hypocrite.

>It is not illegal to run in the left lane as long as Wrong,,,it is not permitted to "cruise" in the right lane in Pa.

>right lane once they've hit the posted limit?

>That's ludicrous. Especially considering the >volume of traffic in this area.

Your personal dislikes and opinions of the law are irrelevant to your hypocrisy of offering excuses why you break the law. Your words were "There is NO excuse for breaking the law. Ignorance is no excuse. The hows and whys are irrelevant. You break the law, you're a criminal. :
And my favorite "If you don;t like the law, you are bound to obey them or lobby to have them legally changed". So go ahead David, instead of bitching about it and doing a siren's dance around your hypocrisy and crying about how the law is written and whining about traffic, take your own advice and change the law you break, you criminal, you.

>The fact is that despite recent

Well, then feel free to ahead and explain away how these "left winger misinterpretations" affect religious laws when the republicans are the only party in charge of both the senate and the house....ie: the country.

Agree,..which is why the Bush approval rating in Iraq is nearing an all time low again.

>In theory, it should mean nothing. But you >know those obstructionist democrats trying to

That's one biased opinion. The other side of the coin you seek to ignore is that the fillibuster is the last legal refuge to place an end to the republicans seeking to end and change laws that would prevent a one party rule...theirs.

>How? There is still a vote.

Except ythe repubs seek to cancel the demos.

> In a vote,the majority rules. That's the way >any vote works. I suppose you'd rather apply a >"filibuster-ike" rule to challenge any majority

(sig) Frank taught you the origins of the filibuster. You continue to have hatred for more American designed security designed to protect us from such fascism.

>Maybe we should be filibustering the last >election, so that you PEST sufferers could >leverage your minority rule to place Kerry in

See what a poor retainment value you employ.....your hatred is so rabid, you erreoneously referred to myself and Frank as demos and Kerry supporters. That downslide is really messing you up.

>That's all a filibuster is, a desperate attempt by >the minority to overturn the wishes of the >majority.

That is only your misinterpretation of another definition. In fact, what makes this so shocking, is you were given the exact origination of the fillibuster in addition to its proper definition, but you are dogged determined to wallow in your own ignorance.

>So tell me, how is THAT any more fair, than >having a straight up or down vote? And in >typical democratic hypocrisy, the same people >who are screaming to save the filibuster now,

Nevertheless, the misinterpretation has been all yours even though Frank neatly wrapped it all up and presented you with the facts clearly indicating congress shall keep the clause of separation of church and state intact.

>It was never there in the first place.

Denial is your best trait.,,but denial when presented proof is learned ignorance.

Your mistake (almost everytime you post this week) is in believing their is some type law doing just what the clause prohibits.

>There is NOTHING in the >constitution which calls for the complete

fact,, that's the exact
word you used,,let's see it again..

>In the case of religious influences in this

>endorsed it since the beginning.

HAhahhaa,,what a card you have become, largely opposing yourself and self-contradictions galore.

>and prevents the government from denying >someone the right to observe their religion of >choice. Nowhere does the constitution claim >or imply that congress persons, the president,

No one said otherwise. Your deficit has you confused and focusing on topic only you invoke and conjure.
But while you're at it, it also says nothing of your claim that such was "endorsed".

>Nor does it ban the practices of referring to >God in an oath, or during any other >proceeding of the government.

See above concerning your conjured ramblings taken from outter space.

>Did you know that every session of congress

>the 10 commandments inside the supreme >court?

And E Pluribus Unum is on the buck.

>There has NEVER been a complete >separation of church and state in this >government.

Yes, there has. Your misinterpretation has you believing that a faith or belief is equal to an established or endorsed religion or church.

>The whole idea of any separation in the >beginning was not to protect government from >religion, it was to protect religion from >government.

And you arrived at such a conclusion exactly how....?

>Now go do some research before you buy into >left wing propaganda.

And that would be another erroneous claim that I am a demo or Kerry supporter,,,hmmm,,,,,it really bugs you when the repubs are made to answer for their incompetence, especially yours.
The only zealots that mean anything are the ones in charge...repubs.
  Because you agree with the religious zealots and have on many occasion admitted that your moral views are to be fostered upon others and if they do not subscribe to your radical positions and admitted (on many occasion) socialistic tendencies, you mistakenly hold them as an enemy of yourself, seeking to take away that of which you believe.

>I and many others who are currently in the >majority. You know, the ones who reelected

>G.W. Bush.

The majority didn't vote, David.

>The majority of those who voted, voted for >Bush.

That's a far, far, cry from claiming a majority or a mandate. The ony mandate Bush had was with Jeff Gannon..

>As for the rest, who's to say who they would >have favored. Any speculation on your part, is >just that.

As yours. At least I'm not going around illustrating to the world I believe Bush had a mandate.

> Besides, those who don't play an active part >in their government, have no right to complain >about it.

Such as you and your issues relating to radio of which your life has become largely reactive as opposed to proactivity. You eally sould take your own advice, but hypocrites rarely do.

>I would argue that it was those influences

>which made this country one of strong moral

>and ethical principles.

In one sentence you claim the moral and ethical principles of this country have degraded terribly and even said society was reflected on the air.
Now you say the country is once again of strong moral fiber and ethical principle.

>No, I said that this country was FOUNDED on

>strong moral and ethical principles.

No,,you said,,,"Which made this country one of strong moral fiber".

>Yes, MADE as in FOUNDED, as in "past >tense". I know you have trouble >comprehending, but I didn't think I had to drop >to this level to explain it to you.

Only because you are the only one that understands yourself.
The only misinterpretation here, is the initial impression I had of you and your education. I thought you were reasonably schooled at one point, until the several weeks, between your gaffes and unlearned comments regrading the law of your own state and the glaring holes in your civics and history knowledge, law knowledge, and FCC knowledge.

Here's some nuts & bolts details on the skit via the Elecraft & FRC reflectors:

- - - -

In case anyone is interested, here's something K6CTW posted on the Elecraft list last night. K3PH:

- - - -

Well to answer some of the questions I have received:

1. Ben was just getting ready to start entering the last 2 words when I was done.

2. None of us had any idea of the text we would be sending, not only for the "show" but also for the 3 rehersals (in which we smoked em every time)

3. Chip, K7JA was sending and I, Ken, K6CTW was receiving.

4. The radios were FT-817's provided by Chip's company Yaesu and HRO.
Reason for that choice was that we needed the most frequency agile radios we could get. When I talked to the technical folks, they recommended we START at 2 meters and go up because of all of the lower frequency noise and RFI from the other TV equipment. When I got there, we took out a spectrum analyzer and studied all of the interference possibilities. I ended up choosing 432.200 MHz because that guaranteed no RFI from their equipment and we were high enough not to overload their front ends either. This was then verified and it was what we were using at the FT-817's lowest setting.

5. I already knew that 28-30 wpm would easily keep us in front of even the current world record holder, and also it is the fastest speed that I can make nice readable copy on paper with a "stick".

6. The telegrapher "costumes" were the producer's idea but it was fun for both Chip and I.

7. In rehersal I, K6CTW had a number of lines which would have really done a nice job of plugging ham radio and telegraphy however at our last dress rehersal, they decided to cut them out to make the segment "fit". (maybe next time).

8. I decided that I would be the receiver because I'm not bothered by crowd noise etc. If you enjoyed the segment, PLEASE email, write, etc. to let "The Tonight Show" know about it. That way we may have a chance for a bigger segment next time. Thanks for the kind comments from all and let's keep on having fun! (It is a hobby after all). 73, Ken, K6CTW

- - - - -

*A few more points for clarification: When my XYL, Connie, originally answered the call, at my home, from the producers of the show, she explained that I operated both codes and that I considered myself to be a good but not exceptional operator. However, she is the one who "sold" the producers that the skit could work. She also did a VERY credible job of explaining Morse telegraphy and the radio code and its uses. (You all might think to send her a thanks too as without her, this would never have happened cjcarroll2 at earthlink.net) When they contacted me later that afternoon, I explained that my wife was correct, I am a competent CW and Morse operator.

Your point is interesting in that they did try and get the fastest text messengers they could fly in. I did however explain that if the Tonight Show folks had been able to get the equivalent world record holder in CW to do this, it would have been at lmost TRIPLE the speed we were going at.

The reason, as I have explained before, that we worked at about 28 or so wpm is that this is the fastest speed that I can make nice readable copy with a pencil as they did not have the ability to let me use a typewriter for copy (and I thought they were going to do a camera shot of my copy for verification).

Also, since we did not have the time to set up headphones, I just added some extra volume for me, had the stage folks cut my mike (to prevent feedback and overload) and copied off of the speaker. To re-emphasize the point, I'm just an average CW op who ccasionally operates the CW SS

QRP, whith my K2 of course, and really enjoys CW, and traffic handling.
By the way, the radios used were Chip's not from Yaesu and the backup radios were from HRO. 73, Ken, K6CTW *

What you see on TV is taped and edited. They cut out things like the ID.

FCC requires that you ID at the end of a QSO, and every 10 minutes if the QSO goes on longer than 10 minutes. The clip is only 3 minutes long.

I used to get a mediocre match on my I-maxx, until I added a counter-poise to it. The difference was dramatic. I cut 4 lengths of 14g wire to 9 ft, crimped a lug on it and attached it to the bottom of my tri-pod. It brought it down from a 1.5:1 on 555 to a flat 1.1:1 from 26.285 to 27.999! Without touching the tuning rings, I could make quite dramatic adjustments with the wires themselves. I tried spreading out in 90* fashion, but my best result was when I braided them together and dropped them as close to straight down as my roof allowed.

Even hard drawn copper stretches with time.

Copper clad is not that bad if the cladding is thick enough. A vendor can improve profits if the copper cladding is kept to bare minimum.
There are two real problem with copper cladded steel. One is the plating process itself. If it is not uniform and thick enough t hen mositure can penetrate the copper plating and cause the underlying steel to rust. Once that happens the radiation resistance goes south big times. The second issue is that any protective coating on the copper is missing or damgaed will cause copper to oxide. Copper oxides are not conducting. The antenna performance then goes south in a big hurry.

Even hard drawn copper is subject to oxidation if not protected. While the effects of copper oxides on the very thin surface is marginal at frequencies below 30 MHz., they can be disastorous at frequencies in the VHF regions and higher.

Slick driving..I would be afraid of tearing up some sheet metal to the tune of $100's of thousands of dollars if it was me behind the wheel in that stunt.

There's quite a few late models that he's sliding past in that clip and it's raining.

I'm actually going to go see the new edition just to watch that old Charger get around. Okay, I may check out the daisey-dukes on the blonde chick's ass (her name escapes me) a little bit but it's mostly about the car.

Remember the Mustang II? What a shit hunk, except those chassis work well for many other applications.

Hello, Mopar

Some call it binary, but the fact that there are both short and long characters as well as short and long spaces (spacing between characters is shorter than spacing between words) leads me to not consider it "binary". When I wrote a Morse code decoder, I was using a base 3 system to decode it. At least if I recall correctly. I still have the source code but haven't looked at it for about a decade.

I am loving this new pipe! I booted the computer, the wave file played as Windows started up, I hadn't clicked on Explorer, I bent over to pick up a magazine, and when I looked at the computer, the anti-virus had already downloaded and installed the update! :))

Just wondering where there is the 'lacking of good explanation' areas?
Shoot, I thought it was a fairly well done site! Much better than most of us can truly understand. I wished that when I built the first antenna I had had acess to that site. Would have kept a lot of 'trial and error' work from going on.

Now, let's take a closer look at this, and expose just why these answers that you gave are highly unlikely. You once claimed that you were in the military in the mid 80's, then worked for a while. Then you went back to school (presumably because you had trouble finding a decent job). Now a BS program requires a 4 year course study at a minimum. Assuming you're not living at home sponging off mon and dad, you're going to have to work to make ends meet, which means a leaner curriculum, and a longer time frame. Personal experience has shown me that a night school BS degree can take up to 8 years to complete. But even so, you likely did not receive your degree until the 90's. Now, a BS in engineering does not, in itself qualify you to teach. You would also need additional education to receive a teaching certificate. Then there is the issue of experience. Most guys straight out of school are not worth a heck of a lot, and are usually hired at entry level positions in order to gain experience. During this time, you've also claimed to have worked as a broadcast engineer at 2 different radio stations (which is probably the only truth).

So, in a period of time that spans no more than about 10 to 15 years, you want us to believe that you've been a broadcast engineer, worked in marketing and design engineering (even with no previous related experience), and taught at a university (Even without any teaching experience in "lower" educational institutions). Man, you're one busy guy Frank. So, I guess the stint tending bar is just a result of "burnout" from all that achieving?

Either you just can't seem to figure out what you want to do for a living, or you like to tell tall tales.

>> Or maybe you'd work with me.
>Doubtful. I -order- pizzas, I don't deliver them.

Ah yes, the other defense mechanism typical from an underachiever with self esteem issues. It is certainly more comforting, to someone in your predicament, to accuse and believe that others are worse off than you are thereby justifying, to some degree, your own failures. So if you want to believe that I deliver pizza's for a living (And supporting a family, a large home, a boat, camper, and 3 vehicles on that salary) so that you can feel better about yourself, then I'll go along with it. Heck, I'd hate to think you went for the razor blades or the old rubber hose from the tailpipe on my account.

All I can say is that I sure wish I had the tools of the internet and much less tedious and actually somewhat interesting, and fun.

There will be a time, in the not so distant future, where all "quaint old days". I am currently involved in projects that enable much of the concept of a seamless central home voice, video, and data

Ah, another port of call for the traveling military grunt on Uncle Sam's nickel. It's a far different experience traveling, when you can stay at a 4 or 5 star hotel on the company tab. The downside though is that the food can get a bit rich and that tends to make the job of maintaining my boyish figure a bit more difficult ;-)

I've never been to Norway, although I came close to hitting Amsterdam. I managed to get out of going because I didn't want to leave my wife and then infant daughter home alone for a few weeks. I don't like traveling to foreign countries anyway. Especially with the anti-American sentiment going around. But there are a lot of very nice U.S. cities that I've liked. Mostly I remember them due to interesting eateries the I've found there. The "Wattaburger" in Brownsville Texas, Dickies Ribs in Dallas, Farmer Jones' Red Barn in Lakeland Florida, Nandell's Inn in Seattle, The Airplane themed pub (the name escapes me) across from Mitchell airport in Milwaukee, and many others.

We could talk about airports too. Even those folks in Denver and San Francisco want their pizza's delivered hot and fresh, even if it takes 5 hours to get there.

You are exactly right. That is why this is reaching a head. Someone finds something offensive, gets the muscle of a group such as the ACLU to have it removed (Like lame Holiday party names instead of Christians parties). It's not surprising that the people who support these traditions will fight to retain them.

So, the alternative is to allow people to exceed the posted limit?
That seem somewhat contradictory to me.

So basically, the way the law is written, it pretty much forces people to break the speed limit in order to "justify" using the left lane?

You do understand the logic here right? If you are legally bound to maintain the posted speed limit, then you cannot pass someone already doing the legal limit, and the great majority of traffic would be bound to remain in the right lane, except to pass those occasional slow pokes. I'm sure I don't need to explain heavy traffic to a California resident, but can you imagine if everyone tried to stay in the right lane?

>> Both of you are >> severe underachievers.
>
>I don't think so. I don't think you are either. I do think that >you all are on the far end of political and religious spectrum, >as such, this argument between you three will never end.

I am hardly a religious zealot. I don't even go to church. I am not even a practicing Christian. But I do believe in a "God" and I do believe in intelligent design, and I believe in keeping morality as a guide to responsible social behavior. I am for preserving proven tradition and do not believe that change is automatically a good thing. I am also a political conservative (As are you IIRC), and tend to favor smaller government, personal responsibility and accountability, a free market and a strong morality based system of law and order in order to punish those who cannot act properly in a civilized society.

The arguments between Frank, Twisty and I are much more complex than a simple ideological disagreement. Twisty is twisty. His actions need no further explanation. Frank has been stung ever since I admitted that I supported Bush. A revelation that seems to have affected him personally. Frank has since been trying to prove that support of Bush (and republicans in general) is wrong based solely on his subjective opinion that only an idiot would support him so, consequently, he has been since trying to prove that I'm that idiot. But during the course of the ensuing "debates", Frank has revealed much about his personality, and has given me an insight into his own inner demons. I can now see why he and Twisty have found common ground. They both have a profound distrust of corporations and any form of "the establishment". And, if their level of knowledge and education is as they claim, they are both underachievers. Frank, who once claimed to teach college courses, and claims to hold a BS degree in engineering, working as a bartender. Twisty, who claims to be well versed in law, and an "accomplished" writer, takes snowbirds out to fish on a charter boat, and can't even afford a real computer. No wonder he hides behind an anonymous pseudonym.

It had been fun from a purely psychological standpoint. But I am beginning to tire of this almost constant off-topic banter. I am actually longing for the days when we talked about amplifiers and mods to radios. I never guessed that a simple ideological disagreement would turn into several years worth of trash talking.

Broadband is very nice. Once you get a taste of it, you'll never go back. Combined with wireless access points, I can move all over the house and access the internet with my laptop. I can access streaming audio to pipe to my computer and stereo in my garage, when I'm outside working. Internet video content can be viewed on the TV. I can even monitor the environmental controls in the house from remote locations.
Technology is great. The future is now.

Nope, it's called impeding the flow of traffic. If the basic traffic flow is going 65 to 70mph and you get three cars all going 65mph. The back up behind is more of a hazard than the people breaking the basic speed law.

Gee Dave, after all your sermons about morality -- you don't care about a pedophile that not only used his government office for cyber-sex but promised internships to young boys in exchange for 'dates'? What happened to your morality, Dave? Did it suddenly get lost because West is a conservative Republican?

Where did you go to college, Dave? And BTW, what was the name of that tech school you claimed to have attended? Who does the majority party represent if not the majority? Where does the Constitution require, or even suggest, that religious influence should play any role in the government? How does gay and lesbian marriage infringe on your rights?

Frank was in the military (can earn you college credits) and it doesn't take 4 years minimum to get a BS degree. It is often done in 3 or less. In fact, there are many who do it in less time. Many major universities and schools have BS programs that take less than 4 years.

Not at all. You are not to be in the left lane AT ALL unless you are passing. If the person in front of you in the right lane is doing the speed limit, you have no business in the left or passing lane. Now you are expressing difficulties comprehending your lawbreaking ways that illustrate your hypocrisy.

The logic is that you lived ot be as old as you are but still are a hypocrite and can;t comprehend you are breaking the law and any "logic" you feel is related to your behavior is justification for you to break the law.

That is the law...very good, David. SSince you disagree with it so vehemently, it is suggested you take your own advice .."You are bound to adhere to the law. If you don't agree with it, lobby to have it changed. Breaking the law is no excuse."

Was it the application of your invoked "statistical probability" factor to yourself after you made the comment "there is no George"?

Was it your goof concerning your misuse and misapplication of the word "Quantify"?

Was it your self-contradiction where you first claimed an "endorsement" of religion by the people, then turned around in the same post and claimed there was no endorsement of such?

Perhaps it was because you were accusing me of being wrong in all my claims concerning you, but refused to give explicit permission to post such "wrong" information.

Then again, it could have been your claim that sex, in regards to catching an STD, is not an all or nothing proposition, when that is most certainly what it is,,,,,stay celibate or screw at your own risk.

Maybe it was that old habit you have of denying the existence of everything you are not aware, such as your claim that there is no reference point in which to measure global warming. then again, it could have been the fact that your own party acknowledges such, and just like your chosen hobby, you have no clue concerning those who govern your world.

Then again, it was probably the fact you were conned into admitting you were a criminal (your word) by breaking Pa traffic law.

Good old Jimmie Noserve jumping in as the "expert" on TV broadcast production (years of work in that...). :-)

When is the actual NBC "Tonight Show" taped, Jimmie?
At what time? How long before the NBC TV network feed?

You've been there, right? Waiting in line along Alameda with the other tourists? Or do you have "insider information" again? :-)

>FCC requires that you ID at the end of a QSO, and every 10 minutes

>the QSO goes on longer than 10 minutes. The clip is only 3 minutes >long.

Oh, my, yes, I'm sure the producers were most extremely careful to NEVER break any amateur radio regulations!
[they might ALL lose their JOBS over such a gaffe!] :-)

=======

The "Tonight Show" is ENTERTAINMENT. It isn't a journalism show. It isn't a documentary show. With the new production company featuring Jay Leno, the tone of the "Tonight Show" has taken on a sharper edge, more biting, as compared to De Cordova's company with the late, great Johnny Carson. Leno likes to twit fads and ignorant people.

A current fad is "TXT-ing," that of sending short text messages over cell phones having that feature. It's a big thing among teeners all over the country now. [the USA has over 100 million cell phone subscriberships]

Cell phones were never designed or implemented with text messaging in mind. They were done to extend the wired VOICE telephone. However, as the original analog cell phone converted to digital, a limited form of text messaging was possible and that was incorporated into subscribers' sets. Teeners picked up on that as a form of "very personal, like 'private talk' communication" that grown-ups and others couldn't immediately overhear. That 'privacy' thing is a big hit with teeners. ;-)

"Morse code" is the first BIG instant-communications means and debuted 160 years ago. The On-Off signalling of "morse code" was the ONLY PRACTICAL means of using radio for communications, demonstrated 109 years ago. [most people are AWARE of "morse code" through the entertainment media and most have never experienced first-hand any live communications with that...they know it is OLD and obsolete for practical communications]

It is a no-brainer that old, obsolete "morse code" is faster than the new fad of "TXT-ing" messages via a cell phone. The "demonstration contest" on the Leno show was a SETUP to deliberately POKE FUN at the fad of "TXT-ing." It wasn't anything else...just one more item of "humor" a la the Leno company to get the audience amused by poking fun at current fads.

Ham radio morsemen Lifestylers want to wave flags about "morse code" and how triumphant was their "success" in that show-biz SETUP that was a guaranteed pratfall by the "TXT-ers." That short Entertainment bit was NEVER intended as a true contest.

For a REAL contest, live, [rehearsed or not] manual communications means, pit an experienced typist pair using old, surplus 60 WPM teleprinters against a pair of experienced morsemen using either pencil-and-paper or manual typewriters to record received "morse code." Use "over-the-shoulder" live TV camera angles to show the "incoming" text for the audience...and to show the errors made by the morsemen.

Will TV Entertainment shows ever consider such? No. There's no real Entertainment value except for a very small niche-interest fraction of an audience. This is less of a show-biz SETUP than modern "TXT-ing" versus 160-year-old manual "morse code." Audiences won't have anything to LAUGH at. Teleprinters are going to win out eventually since their throughput is sustainable and less error-prone than manual "morse code" means.

The radio world has LONG AGO done the "contest" bit in actual practice and found "morse code" to be the LOSER. The rest of the radio world has GIVEN UP on "morse code" for communications. The die-hard fanatics in amateur radio still cling to "morse code" as "good" or even "best" because they are still lost in the fantasy and mythology of olden times.

That's not SHOW-BIZ, Jimmie, that's REALITY. Show's over. Get a grip. Go home.

Overall it is a very good site. It is by far better than many that I have seen in the past. But when some try to explain transmission line issues with a small working knowldge of them, the all to often too simple explanations or are lacking or misleading.

In the explanation of why coax affects SWR. While it is not bad, it is typically and over symplistic. The real problem is that comon mode currents are often not understood as to how they are generated and what effects they have on SWR meters. Another thing is that the SWR bridges made for CB and many for Ham use are poor instruments to measure SWR. They are only good to about 3:1 and after that their accuracy suffers greatly. The best way to measure the SWR of the antenna is with a dual directional coupler. Preferably the power measurements should be a spectrum analzer.

Also coax impeadance is determined by ratio of the inside diameter of the outer conductor to the outside diamter of the inner conductor and teh dielctric constant of the medium in between. Not just solely the ratio of the diameter. That would be true only of air dielectric coax.

Coax loss is solely determined by the dielectric and not the shield. As long as the shield is in relatively good shape the sole called "leakage" loss is hardly measureable, even in relatively high power RF transmissions. A shield of 80% is still nearly 100% effective even at frequencies as low as 10 MHz. The openings in the shield would have to be at least 1/16 of a wavelength in order to start to be able to measure leakage. At 10M that is 1.25 meters.

What causes dielectrtic breakdown is chlorine in the PVC, PolyvinalChloride, to leach into the dielectric and cause the characteristic impeadance to change. Also chlorine from sea spray that can leak into the coax from poorly assembled coax connectors. The site is right in that cox does need to be changed. Even the best installations require changing at least once every ten to fifteen yrs.

One thing also about antenna design and installations. Unless you model the ground (Earth) for your area, you have missed a major influience on the performance of any antenna design or installation. There is a deal of hunt and peck to tame some designs. Especially dipoles that are not at least a wavelength above ground. Some designs behave better than others.

Yep. Tarheel U. has (had?) a program set up for jarheads in Camp

Dave would know that already if he actually attended college.

yep, self assigned cb calls. the first number is the country number, then the IR is the club name, then the number after that is the member number. they have their own dxcc awards to give themselves and iota and all that stuff for illegal activity.

Why is it that in the world of CBing that most users love to overdrive.
First they take a radio, cut the clipper out, add a mic with 10x tooo much audio to the poor radio, then over drive a amplifier to full output (way into compressiom) before any modulation is applied.
Now they should know they sound like crap.

Its pretty bad when you have to hide a CB radio. When friends come over have you noticed the need to get out of the CB room as the embarrassment that they might see you around a CB. Most people think CBers are retarded, dumb, homosexual, gay, and queer, so we need to hide them.

They want to sound bad because it attracts far more attention than anything they have to say.

nah, dude.

CB is still COOL!

I have a ham license but I use the CB as a local means to communicate locally.

I would be rude to my friends, family, and guests if I didn't come out of my radio room.

Don't hide your radios.
Represent yo radio!

CBers are neither dumb, retarded,homo,gay, nor queer.
(neither are Hams)

It's the personality that's chosen by the CB user.

I wanna give a shout-out to all my Realistic, Uniden, Cobra, RCI, Galaxy, and Connex users! Word UP!

Represent yo'self and yo radio!

Channel six gets your goat, eh? They aren't all like that, but after listening to nothing but FM duplex then hearing power mics booming on AM, one can see where you would draw that incorrect conclusion.

I've never been told that. In fact, I know what my radio sounds like. I hear it all the time when I'm on the saltwater dx playground. Ya' can't fool me! Where ya' at? I'll swing the beam your way and you can listen to the magic.

Unfortunately, I find some of that behavior here and there, also. But cb use has picked up plenty in the area, especially since those three little storms we had last year. They are having a tax free week here on everything designated "hurricane supplies" and two way radios qualify,,unfortunately, the radios have to be under thirty bucks, but the hand held FRS and others are flying off the shelves. There is always activity on those bands down here,,beaches, theme parks, car caravans,...wait till echo starts showing up on those bands..whoops,,,I think it already has.

then the IR is the club name, then the number after that is the member number. they have their own dxcc awards to give themselves and iota and all that stuff for illegal activity.)

Last I checked it wasn't illegal in all places.
Some of the countries that participate have no laws at all governing those frequencies and those that do have less enforcement than the US.
There are some really cool dx cards to be had among the world. And unlike the next step up, there are always folks on (what is known as the HF cb freeband in the US) these freqs ready to make contact. Unless a contest is kicking on the hammie freqs, you're going to wait a long time to get a fraction of the contacts you get here.

We are in the dead zone for that. I don't recall talking to many people in your neck of the woods on the freeband. Perhaps we can hook up on the next cycle peak and compare how much it sucks to grow old. I do get above you up the eastern sea board pretty well at times.

I had a wierd scenerio during the last peak DX cycle. During the winter, I was getting nothing east of LA, except FL. Then during the summer, I started getting OH, VA, Iowa.

So, it's possible. I just need a car rig.

No out of a car and a van. But that's not big odds when you consider I had CB's in damn near everything I drove at one time. Bastards took the ssb portable and the amp both times.

They left my music selection/collection alone both times too. <snicker>

Car rig? What kinda shit is that?

Didn't you just put an antenna up at home? Although I'd suggest putting up the biggest freakin beam you can afford to turn. Flat side can make a big difference sometimes..I only have a y-quad but I can hit it with a kilowatt of clean power if I want to, not that you need that.

Antenna is the key, and car models don't stack up.

I would pick up MURS radios instead of the FRS type. They have a bit more power and at VHF they will carry a bit further and you can use external antennas too. The external antenna is nothing more that a slightly modified Ham 2m type. You can't use external antennas on FRS radios. Some combo FRS and GMRS types you might be able to do it, but they're hard to find. Also depending on the model of MURS radio you may be able to program in the local VHF weather channel on 162.xxx MHz.

So are you ready for the hurricane season? You got lucky last year I think. I flew in to West Palm Beach about a month ago to drive out to the Indiantown area. I saw plenty of roof work still being done as the plane came in for a landing.

Heck, you can earn a college "degree" these days without ever setting a foot in a classroom. But 20 years ago, that just wasn't the case.
You had a certain amount of credits that you had to earn, and a required course curriculum. Yes, it was possible to do it in less than four years, but that required an overly ambitious fast-paced schedule. Most people are not up for that.

Night school allowed people to avoid many of the "nonsense" courses, which were unrelated to your major, that the full time day programs usually required you to take. But the people who took the night school route usually were, like me, working full time during the day, and could not take as many courses per semester and, consequently, it could take close to 8 years to earn the B.S.

For engineering? We're not talking about liberal arts here.

Name them. And also list what the student has to do in order to cram 4 years worth of work and study into "less than" 4 years.

A B.S. degree requires a certain amount of credits and certain required courses. So either you have to take more classes in less time, or you are somehow "getting around" certain required classes.
That starts to bring up Frank's earlier analogy of the "new" 2 year Bachelor's degree, and how the "old" 4 year degree would be worth more
by virtue of more time spend in the classroom.

Geeze Frank, don't get your panties into a bunch here. This has nothing to do with my "morality", only that you live 3000 miles away

Where does the Constitution require or even suggest that religious influences should NOT play any role in the government?

It is not a matter of infringing on my "rights". It's matter of tarnishing an institution that is based on religious practices. The government has no right to do such. The only thing the government can or should do is offer a civil union option, to provide gay couples the same civil rights and responsibilities as straight couples when dealing with secular issues.

You, a big advocate for separation of church and state, should understand where the line is drawn here. If you advocate that church doctrine should not be infused into the workings of the government, then the converse is also true. Otherwise you are practicing hypocrisy.

I have no problem with secular civil unions. I have a big problem with gay marriages.

You told me a couple of weeks ago that you out-grew collecting QSL cards.
You compared them to baseball cards. By saying this, you insinuated that I

You just like to piss people off, don't you? I believe I've already made

It depends on the person. For some people, three hours a day in the lecture halls is mindbogglingly slow. For others the challenge is overwhelming. The trick is to choose classes each quarter/semester that make the most efficient use of study time required -outside- the classroom. And not to waste your time at keggers.

Also, some colleges and most Universities offer equivalency tests as well as credits for prior experience directly related to the field. I cut down my time by almost a full year by testing out of first-year electricity courses, math all the way through calculus, and was given credits for being a radio tech in the USMC.

>Night school allowed people to avoid many of the "nonsense" courses, >which were unrelated to your major, that the full time day programs >usually required you to take.

Those "nonsense" courses have very legitimate purposes. Suppose your major is electrical engineering. You need to study economics so you can do a cost/benefit analysis for a design project, as well as be able to run a business if the opportunity arises. For the same reason it's a good idea to study a little business law and accounting. There is no substitute for good communication skills, -especially- English composition, and because my objective required strong communication skills I decided to minor in the field. Along the same lines, a few courses in humanities and history are also a very good idea since a lot of current events either revolve around cultural differences and issues, or require some understanding of the history surrounding the events. Etc, etc, etc. You pick any course required for a BS and I'll explain how and why it's related to your field of study.

Or is it that you don't like the idea of a liberal education because it's 'liberal'?

> But the people who took the night school >route usually were, like me, working full time during the day, and

If that's the way they choose to do it then that's their choice. I worked my way through college while working at night -- bartending.

Again, we know what the climate was, but not conclusively how it got

Exactly, which is why it is extremely difficult to make a positive determination as to the percentage of man's contribution to the total amount of global warming.

>Some are both. However,

Yes, and that "science" is in much dispute right now as there are many scientists who do not accept the findings of others as conclusive.
There are still many assumptions being made.

>>Without a point of reference, it is extremely

Which we cannot positively ascertain because we do not know how much of that gas truly came as a result of man-made pollution versus that which is naturally occurring. One large volcano eruption, for instance, can drastically effect the concentration of methane gasses in the atmosphere.

> An
>example can be the amount of methane in a predetermined air sample.

Or a volcano eruption. Methane gas does not have a "tag" which says
"man made" or natural. We can only measure the total concentration.

Since you called it "elementary", it's obvious that you've never studied it, as it is far too complex a process to be called "elementary". By attempting to make this issue simpler than it really is, you also disparage the scientists who do this for a living.

>Chloroflourocarbons released by the burning of fossil fuels is directly

No argument. But you can't positively determine the rate of global fossil fuels today.

First of all, there is no "norm" when it comes to climatic shifts.
Many of those shifts occurred as the direct result of an external random event, such as the asteroid strike which is generally the current accepted theory for precipitating the extinction of the dinosaurs at the end of the Cretaceous period. There are other craters all over the planet, as evidence of other such strikes. There is also evidence of large volcano eruptions, which can spew enough particulate matter into the atmosphere, that an "ice age" would likely result. The climatic shifts which occur between these significant events is likely only the result of climatic balance or a normalization from the extremes caused by the random external events. It's also conceivable that over the last billion years, that the solar energy output from the sun could have deviated to some degree as well, which can certainly affect surface temperature here.

We may still be "recovering" from the last ice age, as early evidence shows that this planet was a great deal warmer millions of years ago.

>When the glaciers continue

This is science, not politics. I'm arguing that we don't definitively know the relative effects of man's pollution on the total amount of global warming because there are still too many variables to make a responsible conclusion.

You also failed to address the other side of the coin. Not only is man's pollution a factor, but the gradual deforesting, by land developers, can have a profound effect on the amount of CO2 in the air (A major greenhouse gas)

Simply claiming that "the majority disagrees with you" is meaningless,

That was -your- analogy, Dave. And it's irrelevant to this discussion since the concept of a "2 year degree" was to offer a BS after completing only half the current academic requirements. This topic deals with completing the current academic requirements in different amounts of time.

> and how the "old" 4 year degree would be worth more
>by virtue of more time spend in the classroom.

Not "time", Dave -- the amount that is learned. If you really need an analogy, just look at the requirements for an Extra-class ham license. The code test is down to 5 wpm, which more than a few hams feel has "diminished the value" of their license. You used the "2 year degree" analogy as an argument against gay marriage when you -should- be using it as an argument against dropping the code requirement. But I don't hear you screaming about that at all.

Regardless, if a person can complete a 4 year BS program in 2 years, more power to him. But that's not the same as cutting the cirriculum in half in order to reduce a 4 year program to only 2 years. That's the same as dumbing down the course..... in fact, it's not just the -same- as dumbing down the course, it -IS- dumbing down the course.

That's it? That's all you have to say about the subject? No diatribe about how it diminishes the credibility of your own mayor? No sermon on how his sexual perversions are a moral abomination? Instead you refer to his homosexuality and pedophilia as "human flaws" when you have consistently referred to such behavior in much stronger language?

Hey, it's not like I'm suprised -- it's ok to call Kerry a criminal when there has been no trial; but Bush, who was tried and convicted of a DUI, is guilty of nothing more than a "civil infraction". I see your point, Dave. But what you refuse to accept is that marriage is not exclusive to religion. It may have been formally defined under

Stop assuming, but since you did, I will lay odds years working in the

and took off in the nineties.

You came full circle from denying it takes place (BS in less than 4 years) to not only acknowledging it happens, but giving your own examples. See what you are capable of when others force you to think. You sometimes just need a little kick of motivation.

It's not difficult at all. I just taught you that the concentration of such gases, such as methane gas, is but a single method by which is measured.
Some are both. However,
science has methods of measuring each,,including natural occurring vs. manmade chemicals,,,such as methane gases.

Yes, but it does not dilute or enrich what is already there, it simply adds quantity to one or the other. Such an example is very easily taken into consideration and calculations allow for the exact molecular configuration when determining such factors. This is done by the precise and absolute measuremtn of related contributions, such as time of eruption, length of eruption, velocity of eruption, etc., etc.

An
example can be the amount of methane in a predetermined air sample. Higher concentrations of the gas can be attributed to manmade releases and emissions.

Which is the exact manner in which to tell man-made from natural.

Sure you can. One measures the rate of speed the studied glaciers melt.
If they suddenly stopped melting and began growing, the figured equations and calculations are all that's left to give you the answer you seek.
Global warming was proved by the continual shrinkage of the polar ice cap confirmed by 24-7 high tech monitoring of such. Villages that reside in the frozen tundra watch their mountains of ice shrink each year.

Not any more. Perhaps when you were i grammar school, but the most compelling andgenerally accepted theory now is they simply died out. The meteor that caused the ice age that was originally thought to have brought about the extinction of such creatures is now believed to have occured many, many years after the dinosaurs have already become extinct.

I talked my mom and step dad up here in to installing a natural gas powered generator. So they went out and got either a 12KW or a 15KW unit with automatic switch over and self test. They're both retired and my mom has a bit of a hard time getting around, she needs two knee replacements done. They've lost power several times where they live, not counting the huge blackout the other year. Where they live it's about a 30 mile hike up to their lake to check up on them. Knowing they have power for heat etc.
even in the winter time is a big relief.

That's where I stayed. I did go downtown to see the lake. All they had was a small sand beach and that tee shaped observation pier. I didn't see much else. Sure doesn't look much like a tourist area.

I'm not really in to fishing but yeah I did see people doing like you said. What about those, looks like, canals that run around the lake? Seems to me they have some kind of levee on the north side and several dams with spillways along there. What's that all about?

I had a Galaxy 949. Great on AM. Drifted like an unanchored boat on SSB. It was terrible on SSB. The Midland is notorious for terrible adjacent channel interference.

You will need to install the Channelguard filter on the Midland. Here is some info:

http://www.cbgazette.com/79-290_review.html

I would try to get a Uniden Grant, Grant XL, Grant LT, or their equiv, if you serious into SSB. If you are just going to AM, then the 959 is fine.

Hello, Mopar

Don't keep falling for the trolls. I'm just curious as to which group will finally get back to it's original intent - rec.radio.cb or rec.radio.amateur.policy.

Unbelievable. Don't try to match wits with unarmed opponents. You have to realize that you are dealing with modest double-digit I.Q.s in both groups
;)

Well, in the first insult...you have been proven to be one, seeing as how you are too scared to say where you are camping at Dayton.

As for the second one, we all already knew you were one, seeing as how you advertise on channel 19 around the Petro in Girard, Ohio.

Since she is too chicken to say where he is camping, after repeatedly making threats to hams and acting like she is billy bad ass, she has now been conclusively proven to be charlie chicken ass.

We have given this wristflipper a solid month to say where she is camping. Since she hasn't said where, there are 2 possible conclusions:

1> she is a coward (most likely)

2> she is not going to Dayton (not likely because she is going to have nude pics taken while kissing 6LQ6 tubes for LAMBDA's 2006 calendar)

Most CB technology has been unchanged in the last 20 years, with a couple exceptions. Midland made what appears to be state of the art display, but their receiver sucks. What many people is get a modded 10 meter radio and use it on CB. The Grants are somewhat old, but very well made. You have to find one that hasn't been hacked. There are a bunch of Grant equivilent radios that use the same board. Uniden still makes excellent AM radio today, if you want just AM. Or you can go with the Galaxy. I would go with Uniden.

Bummer. I thought I'd lost a valve last week, lucky though just a bad carburetor.

The "Tonight Show" is ENTERTAINMENT. It isn't a journalism show. It isn't a documentary show. With the new production company featuring Jay Leno, the tone of the "Tonight Show" has taken on a sharper edge, more biting, as compared to De Cordova's company with the late, great Johnny Carson. Leno likes to twit fads and ignorant people.

A current fad is "TXT-ing," that of sending short text messages over cell phones having that feature. It's a big thing among teeners all over the country now. [the USA has over 100 million cell phone subscriberships]

Cell phones were never designed or implemented with text messaging in mind. They were done to extend the wired VOICE telephone. However, as the original analog cell phone converted to digital, a limited form of text messaging was possible and that was incorporated into subscribers' sets. Teeners picked up on that as a form of "very personal, like 'private talk' communication" that grown-ups and others couldn't immediately overhear. That 'privacy' thing is a big hit with teeners. ;-)

"Morse code" is the first BIG instant-communications means and debuted 160 years ago. The On-Off signalling of "morse code" was the ONLY PRACTICAL means of using radio for communications, demonstrated 109 years ago. [most people are AWARE of "morse code" through the entertainment media and most have never experienced first-hand any live communications with that...they know it is OLD and obsolete for practical communications]

It is a no-brainer that old, obsolete "morse code" is faster than the new fad of "TXT-ing" messages via a cell phone. The "demonstration contest" on the Leno show was a SETUP to deliberately POKE FUN at the fad of "TXT-ing." It wasn't anything else...just one more item of "humor" a la the Leno company to get the audience amused by poking fun at current fads.

Ham radio morsemen Lifestylers want to wave flags about "morse code" and how triumphant was their "success" in that show-biz SETUP that was a guaranteed pratfall by the "TXT-ers." That short Entertainment bit was NEVER intended as a true contest.

For a REAL contest, live, [rehearsed or not] manual communications means, pit an experienced typist pair using old, surplus 60 WPM teleprinters against a pair of experienced morsemen using either pencil-and-paper or manual typewriters to record received "morse code." Use "over-the-shoulder" live TV camera angles to show the "incoming" text for the audience...and to show the errors made by the morsemen.

Will TV Entertainment shows ever consider such? No. There's no real Entertainment value except for a very small niche-interest fraction of an audience. This is less of a show-biz SETUP than modern "TXT-ing" versus 160-year-old manual "morse code." Audiences won't have anything to LAUGH at. Teleprinters are going to win out eventually since their throughput is sustainable and less error-prone than manual "morse code" means.

The radio world has LONG AGO done the "contest" bit in actual practice and found "morse code" to be the LOSER. The rest of the radio world has GIVEN UP on "morse code" for communications. The die-hard fanatics in amateur radio still cling to "morse code" as "good" or even "best" because they are still lost in the fantasy and mythology of olden times.

That's not SHOW-BIZ, Dannyboy, that's REALITY. Show's over. Get a grip. Go home.

I'm sorry if the truth bothers you. Bush's conviction was for a motor

Then neither do any of yours for, as Twisty is so fond of pointing out, USENET is an anonymous service. Very little about anyone is verifiable. Being a ham puts me at somewhat of a disadvantage, as my name and address can be obtained from my call sign. But any personal information beyond that is revealed by personal choice at your own risk. As long as guys like Twisty can be a continual disruption and can safely hide from the consequences behind his cloak of anonymity, I feel no obligation to provide any more of my personal information, just to satiate your credibility issues. Remembering what happened to Dennis O, when his place of employment was found out, is further incentive for me to remain quiet about those aspects of my personal life.

I never made any such claim. But I'm sure you've misinterpreted one of

I did say that the constitution was written by religious, God respecting people, most of whom were Christian.

From a secular point of view, they have the right to live in sin, but no true Christian church would recognize such a union. And any institution that would, cheapens and tarnishes that institution.

By forcing universal recognition of gay marriages as legitimate, which they are not in the eyes of God.

>is not exclusive to religion.

But it started there.

>It may have been formally defined under >concept of marriage is not only secular but universal.

By necessity, not by choice. And the secular definition of marriage simply adopted the religious definition of marriage in order to define the civil rights that married couples would gain. Creating a new definition of marriage, that is not endorsed by the church, is not acceptable.

Think of it as similar to a copyrighted trademark. The church has "licensed" the term "marriage" to the government to use for civil purposes, as long as they abide by the terms of the license. Unless the church decides to condone a gay union (Not likely), then the government has no right to apply the term "marriage" to a secular gay union.

Like I said before, I have no problem with the government creating a gay civil union, with the same civil rights and responsibilities given to married couples, just don't call it marriage.

> And as I have >pointed out several times before, the Christian definition of marriage >is, at best, poorly defined.

But it has been widely accepted in this country for hundreds of years. Marriage is only recognized in the secular arena, due to the additional legal rights and responsibilities that couples get. Before the complexities of secular society necessitated such civil recognition of marriage, the only thing a couple needed to do was have the marriage blessed before God at a church service. That was all that was necessary to legitimize a marriage.

Ah, you're back to making unfounded speculative assumptions and then drawing an erroneous conclusion based on those unfounded speculations. That's yet another example of your poor logic. You never could stick to the facts Frank. But your liberal demonization tactic doesn't work on me Frank. Labeling me will not change the very real legitimacy of the issue.

Because those "flaws" were largely invented by the left leaning media. There has been none to date which have been proven. Rathergate, is a glaring example of one such smear which got discovered before any real damage could be done. Then there is the more recent Newsweek gaffe about flushing the Koran down a toilet (How does one flush a book down a toilet anyway?). Did you know that the gutless clowns at Newsweek had the nerve to actually blame the repercussions of their erroneous reporting on the Bush administration, for not denying it quickly enough? They print a lie, and they blame Bush for not denying it, as the reason why those people were killed in the protests. Unbelievable! But there is no character on the left side of the aisle. And it becomes more apparent with each passing day, and each further shrill speech a democrat makes.

What you think is irrelevant, and contrary to your wild imagination, you do not represent the majority. But I'll make a deal with you, I'll tell you every place where I went to school, when you give me your real name and address. Deal?

It should be that simple. But you forgot to consider, that not all courses are offered each semester, pretty much forcing you to do things "their way". Trying to transfer credits from other schools was also sometimes problematic. Sometimes they would refuse to give credit, other times they would only give partial credit. Colleges are somewhat competitive, and have no incentive to have students give another school money, and then accept that as credit in their school.
At least that's the way it was 20+ years ago.

Yes, I am aware of "testing out" I did similar things, with my previous tech school credits.

Ok, then explain to me the necessity of phys-ed courses? Those are the ones that I was referring to as "nonsense". The examples you gave referring to them as "nonsense".

Possibly, in an extreme case. But I was using standard norms (Which is

But even if I was wrong and Frank earned his degree a year earlier, it doesn't change much of what I put down on the timeline, and doesn't change the suspicion that Frank has been a little too restless for the

I never said it wasn't possible, only that it's not likely. You like to cite extreme examples to make (or counter) a point. On the other hand, I tend to take my examples from the means of the bell curve.
Most people fall into the 70% part of the bell curve, not the outside

Its closer than you think. Once we create a WIFI-like wireless data network to blanket most areas, this will become a reality. Cellular can already do this to some extent, but the cellular network cannot handle the increased bandwidth required for full motion video.

They didn't do "over the shoulder" video on Leno, Lennie, however the Morse guys apparently did 100% copy.

I was able to hear 90% from TV audio, and the receiving guy

Then why do you refer to a homosexuality as immoral, yet a homosexual that is a conservative Republican merely has "human flaws"? This has to do with the strength of your wording, Dave. You use strong words when addressing people you despise, but much softer words when describing bad behavior of people you favor. This isn't a recent

Apparently not, since the majority didn't agree with the "principles, character, morality" that the Republicans attempted to impose. So who does the majority party represent if not the majority? And why are you having such a difficult time answering such a simple question?

You most certainly did make that claim, and more than once:

"The constitution is relative as well. It was framed by Christian people with their religious inspired morality contained within its wording."

"A nation founded by Christian people based on Christian doctrine, even if the 1st amendment decries that there is no 'official' state sponsored religion."

"You who claim to support the constitution and the wisdom of our forefathers (who were all religious people), yet now advocate that we go above and beyond the definitions called for in the constitution..."

Need more examples?

And the law doesn't require them to do anything of the sort. It only requires that you respect their -legal- rights. And if they choose to exercise their right to freedom of expression by calling their "civil union" a marriage, or if their religion formally recognizes homosexual marriage, then you have no right to prevent them from exercising their rights. It's a very simple concept, Dave. Why is it so hard for you to understand?

You aren't bitching about those things because you are only concerned with homosexuality. You are a bigot, Dave. And a hypocrite.

Hans has it nailed pretty much. The value of the Leno Sjow contest was the publicity for ham radio. Beyond that, it was just a mildly interesting win for the hams.
Other than that, what else does the morse vs text messaging contest win "account for"?

THE WORLD
As Climate Shifts, Antarctic Ice Sheet Is Growing
Increased snowfall on the central icecap partly offsets effects of melting glaciers, researchers say.
By Robert Lee Hotz, Times Staff Writer
As glaciers from Greenland to Kilimanjaro recede at record rates, the central icecap of Antarctica has been steadily growing for 11 years, partially offsetting the rise in seas from the melt waters of global warming, researchers said Thursday.
The vast East Antarctic Ice Sheet ☐ a 2-mile-thick wasteland larger than Australia, drier than the Sahara and as cold as a Martian spring ☐ increased in mass every year from 1992 to 2003 because of additional annual snowfall, an analysis of satellite radar measurements showed.
"It is an effect that has been predicted as a likely result of climate change," said David Vaughan, an independent expert on the ice sheets at the British Antarctic Survey in Cambridge, England.
In a region known for the lowest temperatures recorded on Earth, it normally is too cold for snow to form across the 2.7 million square miles of the ice sheet. Any additional annual snowfall in East Antarctica, therefore, is almost certainly attributable to warmer temperatures, four experts on Antarctica said.
"As the atmosphere warms, it should hold more moisture," said climatologist Joseph R. McConnell at the Desert Research Institute in Reno, who helped conduct the study. "In East Antarctica, that means there should be more snowfall."
The additional snowfall is enough to account for 45 billion tons of water added to the ice sheet every year, just about equal to the amount of water flowing annually into the ocean from the melting Greenland icecap, the scientists reported in research published online Thursday by the journal Science.
Rising sea level, which could swamp many coastal and island communities, is considered one of the most serious potential consequences of global warming, according to the most recent assessment by the United Nations' Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change.
Overall, sea level is estimated to be rising by 1.8 millimeters a year worldwide because of the expansion of warming water and the added outwash from melting glaciers in Greenland, Alaska, tropical highlands and some areas of Antarctica.
Every millimeter of increased sea level corresponds to about 350 billion tons of water a year.
The growth in the East Antarctic icecap is enough to slow sea-level rise by a fraction of that ☐ about 0.12 millimeter a year ☐ the researchers reported.

All told, the fresh water locked up in the ice of East Antarctica is enough to raise the level of the oceans by about 196 feet, experts said.
If it continues to grow as expected, the ice sheet could buffer some, but not all, of the effects of anticipated sea-level rise for much of the coming century, the researchers said.
"It is the only large body of ice absorbing sea level rise, not contributing to it," said Curt H. Davis, a radar mapping expert at the University of Missouri-Columbia, who led the research team.
The researchers based their conclusions on an analysis of 347 million radar altimeter measurements made by the European Space Agency's ERS-1 and ERS-2 satellites from June 1992 to May 2003.
They determined that the icecap appeared to be thickening at the rate of 1.8 centimeters every year. The ice is thinning in West Antarctica and other regions of the continent.
"The changes in the ice look like those expected for a warming world," said glaciologist Richard Alley at Pennsylvania State University. "The new result in no way disproves global warming; if anything, the new result supports global warming."

It's not. It's a world class fishing destination only. There are also airboat rides, as you probably know.

You should have brought a pole. Those little canals and offshoots of waterways you saw driving on 710 are among the best in the country for fishing....that's why you always see pickups and cars prked in the middle of nowhere on that road.

They built those things around the lake years ago to protect the area from flooding, but they really screwed up the lake and Everglades in doing so. Most people think the Everglades is way down at the bottom of the state, but the truth is the entire area from way up north Fl (St. Johns River) all the way to the keys is a slow moving mega-river (that includes dozens and dozens of rivers, bays, estuaries, canals, and waterways) and part of the Everglades. There is a huge movement to restore the glades as close as they can to its original condition and it would include fixing what you recognized immediately (the goofy levees and dams) around the lake, as well as a bunch of other well intended but misguided similar projects done years ago by the Army Corp of Engineers.

THE MOST IMPORTANT QUESTION OF YOUR LIFE

This is the most important question of your life.

The question is: Are you saved?

It is not a question of how good you are, nor if you are a church member, but are you saved?

Are you sure you will go to Heaven when you die?

The reason some people don't know for sure if they are going to Heaven when they die is because they just don't know.

The good news is that you can know for sure that you are going to Heaven.

The Holy Bible describes Heaven as a beautiful place with no death, sorrow, sickness or pain.

God tells us in the Holy Bible how simple it is to be saved so that we can live forever with Him in Heaven.

"For if you confess with your mouth Jesus is Lord and believe in your heart that God raised Him from the dead, you will be saved." (Romans 10:9)

Over 2000 years ago God came from Heaven to earth in the person of Jesus Christ to shed His blood and die on a cross to pay our sin debt in full.

Jesus Christ was born in Israel supernaturally to a virgin Jewish woman named Mary and lived a sinless
life for thirty-three years.

At the age of thirty-three Jesus was scourged and had a crown of thorns pressed onto His head then Jesus was crucified.

Three days after Jesus died on a cross and was placed in a grave He rose from the dead as He said would happen before He died.

If someone tells you that they are going to die
and then three days later come back to life and it actually happens then this person must be the real deal.

Jesus Christ is the only person that ever lived a perfect sinless life.

This is why Jesus is able to cover our sins(misdeeds)
with His own blood because Jesus is sinless.

The Holy Bible says, "In Him(Jesus) we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins..."
(Ephesians 1:7)

If you would like God to forgive you of your past, present and future sins just ask Jesus Christ to be
your Lord and Saviour.

It doesn't matter how old you are or how many bad
things that you have done in your life including
lying and stealing all the way up to murder.

Just pray the prayer below with your mouth and mean it
from your heart and God will hear you and save you.

Dear Jesus Christ, I want to be saved so that I can have a home in Heaven with You when I die. I agree with You that I am a sinner. I believe that You love me and want to save me. I believe that You bled and died on the cross to pay the penalty for my sins and that You rose from the dead. Please forgive my sins
and come into my heart and be my Lord and Saviour.
Thanks Lord Jesus Christ for forgiving me and saving
me through Your merciful grace. Amen.

Welcome to the family of God if you just allowed God
to save you.

Now you are a real Christian and you can know for sure that you will live in Heaven forever when this life
comes to an end.

As a child of God we are to avoid sin(wrongdoing), but if you do sin the Holy Bible says, "My dear children,
I write this to you so that you will not sin. But if anybody does sin, we have one who speaks to the Father
in our defense Jesus Christ, the Righteous One."

Those of you that have not yet decided to place your
trust in the Lord Jesus Christ may never get another chance to do so because you do not know when you will die.

Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth and the life: no one can come to the Father(God)(in Heaven), but by me."
(John 14:6)

This means that if you die without trusting in Jesus Christ
as your Lord and Saviour you will die in your sins and be forever separated from the love of God in a place called Hell.

The Holy Bible descibes Hell as a place of eternal torment, suffering, pain and agony for all those who have rejected Jesus Christ.

The good news is that you can avoid Hell by allowing Jesus Christ to save you today. Only then will you have true peace in your life knowing that no matter
what happens you are on your way to Heaven.

Praise the Lord!
Servant of the Lord Jesus Christ

Fuck Jesus Christ that dirty old pervert that molests children and does not use condems. He does not take a bath and is lice ridden and does not wipe his ass with paper but uses the same hand he eats with.
Besides Budda says Jesus Christ need to chill out and quit beating his meat.

3361. Alternatives to declining 11 meter conditions -- phunny phreekin'cies!

Newsgroup: rec.radio.cb

Simply put, Amateur Radio has become terribly boring. CB radio may have its share of occasional light hearted moments, but the real excitement and thrill of the magic of radio has certainly disappeared due to various factors of which we are all most familiar.

For those of you who are searching for the excitement and thrill you once experienced when you first discovered the mystical allure of radio communication, there's a place where you just might find for what you've long been searching.

Let me invite you to check out and ultimately join:

http://groups.yahoo.com/group/all-band_radio_renegades_and_outlaws

This group is specifically designed to provide bored Amateur Radio Operators, CB'ers, Pirate Broadcasters, Commercial Radio Station owners, engineers, on-air talent, RF Technicians, Shortwave Listeners, Legal-Beagles, Newbies and non-techies a place where one can regain a sense of wonder at the sheer exploration of what we like to refer to as "Phunny Phreekin'cies". Modify your radios, put 'em on phreekin'cies on which they were not intended to operate, and enjoy a little harmless game of "cat & mouse". We've done and are doing the exhaustive research as to what operating phreekin'cies are not going to cause any disruption of official, life-dependant traffic. Our first and foremost concern is that we do not jeopardize existing services and their operations. Fellow bootleggers, there are TONS of phreekin'cies just waiting to be populated by a bunch of fun-loving renegades and radio outlaws! Remember, the 11 meter freeband is again taking it's cyclical demise, so we have to go "where the weather suits our clothes", so to speak.

Right now, we're playing around with 6.800 MHz LSB and 13.555 MHz USB (the 45 meter and 22 meter bands respectively). So what are you waiting for? When you finish listening to your favorite Pirate Broadcaster on 6.925 MHz or thereabouts, QSY to the chit-chat channel of 6.800 and discuss the programming you've just heard. Or get on and call CQ and see who comes back!

Please join us at:

http://groups.yahoo.com/group/all-band_radio_renegades_and_outlaws

...and put a little fun back into your two radio operations before your radios become homes for mice, insects, and various genus of mold.

FREE!!

For advanced techs and serious radio hobbyists, we're now offering a FREE copy of our previously published "CB EPROM DATA BOOK" by Martin Pickering. (EPROM = Erasable Programmable Read Only Memory.) We sold it for many years but it's now out of print. This little manual of 60 illustrated pages is an absolute GEM of CB technical knowledge you'll just never find anywhere else. And it's yours for FREE from our Web site.

This book reveals the secrets of advanced channel programming, and picks up where our "CB PLL DATA BOOK" (www.cbcintl.com/pllbook.htm) leaves off. You'll get a thorough background in how these amazing programmable chips can be used to modify many popular CB PLL circuits for expanded frequency coverage. Covers the basic programming techniques, and even includes real PC board artwork for making EPROM circuits. Sample artwork includes EPROM boards for the popular MB8719, PLL02A, ï¿½PD2824, and ï¿½PD858 PLL circuits.

Best of all, the price is right--namely, FREE! Download your FREE copy of "THE CB EPROM DATA BOOK" (948 KB Adobe PDF) at:

Actually, Bill, I think the main focus of the Leno show contest and its Australian predecessor wasn't ham radio at all.

There's a certain mindset that automatically connects "newer" with "faster/better/easier". There's even a word for it: "neophilia", meaning unreasonable love of new things.

The Leno clip shows that mindset in action in the way the woman being interviewed by Jay Leno immediately assumes text messaging will be faster than Morse Code. You also see it in the way the audience agrees. Text messaging is more than 150 years newer than Morse code - it must be faster, right?

Of course Jay knows the outcome is almost certain to be very different - that's the whole point of the segment. And when the Morse Code team wins the contest, the point is clear: Newer isn't always better, and old isn't always bad or useless.

There was a segment on the NPR radio quiz show "Wait, Wait, Don't Tell Me" on May 14, in which a caller was asked to identify the one true story out of three. One story was about the Australian text-vs.-Morse contest, and the other two were made-up along the lines of a new product having some surprising characteristics, like tomatoes that were flammable. (The caller got it right).

Why don't you just post your stuff somewhere else and just ask people to click on your site instead of causing all of the trouble that you do. When you push stuff onto people they react in not so nice ways. Before you posted this, the, what I consider vulgar and non-necessary belligerent posts would not even been thought of, much less written down and posted here.

This is not a religious site. I don't think God has anything in the Bible covering the recreational use of CB radios. It refers to living a good life but why not take it elsewhere? I fear you and your postings more than I fear going to Hell.

If it can't be the ham radio that they knew in their youth, they do want it destroyed, gone, dead. Several have made such claims.

THE MOST IMPORTANT QUESTION OF YOUR LIFE

This is the most important question of your life.

The question is: Are you saved?

It is not a question of how good you are, nor if you are a church member, but are you saved?

Are you sure you will go to Heaven when you die?

The reason some people don't know for sure if they are going to Heaven when they die is because they just don't know.

The good news is that you can know for sure that you are going to Heaven.

The Holy Bible describes Heaven as a beautiful place with no death, sorrow, sickness or pain.

God tells us in the Holy Bible how simple it is to be saved so that we can live forever with Him in Heaven.

"For if you confess with your mouth Jesus is Lord and believe in your heart that God raised Him from the dead, you will be saved." (Romans 10:9)

Over 2000 years ago God came from Heaven to earth in the person of Jesus Christ to shed His blood and die on a cross to pay our sin debt in full.

Jesus Christ was born in Israel supernaturally to a virgin Jewish woman named Mary and lived a sinless life for thirty-three years.

At the age of thirty-three Jesus was scourged and had a crown of thorns pressed onto His head then Jesus was crucified.

Three days after Jesus died on a cross and was placed in a grave He rose from the dead as He said would happen before He died.

If someone tells you that they are going to die and then three days later come back to life and it actually happens then this person must be the real deal.

Jesus Christ is the only person that ever lived a perfect sinless life.

This is why Jesus is able to cover our sins(misdeeds) with His own blood because Jesus is sinless.

The Holy Bible says, "In Him(Jesus) we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins..." (Ephesians 1:7)

If you would like God to forgive you of your past, present and future sins just ask Jesus Christ to be your Lord and Saviour.

It doesn't matter how old you are or how many bad things that you have done in your life including lying and stealing all the way up to murder.

Just pray the prayer below with your mouth and mean it from your heart and God will hear you and save you.

Dear Jesus Christ, I want to be saved so that I can have a home in Heaven with You when I die. I agree with You that I am a sinner. I believe that You love me and want to save me. I believe that You bled and died on the cross to pay the penalty for my sins and that You rose from the dead. Please forgive my sins and come into my heart and be my Lord and Saviour. Thanks Lord Jesus Christ for forgiving me and saving me through Your merciful grace. Amen.

Welcome to the family of God if you just allowed God to save you.

Now you are a real Christian and you can know for sure that you will live in Heaven forever when this life comes to an end.

As a child of God we are to avoid sin(wrongdoing), but if you do sin the Holy Bible says, "My dear children, I write this to you so that you will not sin. But if anybody does sin, we have one who speaks to the Father in our defense Jesus Christ, the Righteous One."

Those of you that have not yet decided to place your trust in the Lord Jesus Christ may never get another chance to do so because you do not know when you will die.

Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth and the life: no one can come to the Father(God)(in Heaven), but by me."
(John 14:6)

This means that if you die without trusting in Jesus Christ
as your Lord and Saviour you will die in your sins and be forever separated from the love of God in a place called Hell.

The Holy Bible descibes Hell as a place of eternal torment, suffering, pain and agony for all those who have rejected Jesus Christ.

The good news is that you can avoid Hell by allowing Jesus Christ to save you today. Only then will you have true peace in your life knowing that no matter
what happens you are on your way to Heaven.

Praise the Lord!
Servant of the Lord Jesus Christ

Yes. I am saved. God was working on his computer one day, had a great inspiration, keyed it in, clicked up Save As, typed in my name, and clicked OK. Ever since then, greatness has happened.

Nice try, John

In the original post I stated "just for grins".

As far as Alzheimer's disease, I know the change I am due before the kid punches the cash tendered into the register. I had to chuckle one day when the gal punched in as though I had made exact change and had to figure out what my change was. She had to call a manager!

I am familiar with how great the Internet is and surf a bit plus am active in several Yahoo groups. Do you remember 911? I lost my AT&T service for a week as they had some central switching station in there. I had to use my Juno account as a backup. The radios, however, work - even without mains. Come to think of it, some of the repeaters work without mains. There are two of them around here that aren't even connected to the mains!

I have no axe to grind. Oh, it bothers me when a couple of high power stations are talking across town on 20 meters, however there is no sanity test for an amateur license. Come to think of it, the same applies to high power CBs. It causes interference thousands of miles away.

What I cannot understand is why so many folks get their panties in a knot over CW. If you enjoy it, use it; if not, don't. No big deal there.

As far as the folks who love to condemn those who enjoy Morse, I suspect that many of them are also lacking in theory and really want a no test ticket. Perhaps we could also do away with a test for a driver's license as well ....

Granted, folks will point out there is a big difference. There is, but the underlying problem is trying to make the airwaves available for everyone. This includes cell-phones (think duplex walk-talkie connected to a repeater which is connected to the telephone company), radio, television, aircraft guidance systems, satellite tv, satellite radio, gps, and so much more. Originally, there were no driver's licenses, but as more automobiles came about, there was a need for regulation. Should we get rid of traffic lights? How about the flashing red lights on school busses? Think there might be a need for regulation? The same applies to radio. Originally, there were no regulations for radio. If you have 100 stations in the world, total, there is really no need for regulation. As technology progressed, there were more demands made for radio spectrum (I say radio, but mean everything using the electro-magnetic spectrum from perhaps 3 kHz to 300 gHz). Regulations came into being and have been revisited and changed many times since.

At least we can discuss this problem with regulating the airwaves; I have another problem that I am going to have to "discuss" a different way.

Our new chief of police is claiming he is going to start cracking down on the loud stereos. One guy wrote an editorial stating "you just don't like my music". Well, I finally got one guy fined and he is staying quiet. It is disconcerting, to say the least, when someone has their boom box turned up 10 dB above distort at midnight and I have to get up in the morning. Some of us actually have jobs. I have some "tunes" that I will share should this start again. I'm not going to bother burning a cd as I've got the mp3 cuts on the computer. Just plug an audio line from the headphone jack on the computer speakers to the 700 stereo system I have for satellite tv. I hope they enjoy my tunes:

1) Washington Post March
2) Anchors aweigh
3) The Thunderer
4) The Stars and Stripes Forever (my favorite)

I've got others on CDs. From all of the services. Funny, but I have a feeling that they will be clamoring for "regulation" all of a sudden :))

Hello, Hans

Very true. One interesting thing of note - text messaging I'd consider similar to cw in one thing - it may be fun, but not highly useful. If one needs to send a lot of text, a computer and the Internet just might be considerably faster (assuming one can touch type at a reasonable rate). Via radio, there are digital modes, of course, and text can be reliably sent much faster with many of the digital modes (even the very dated RTTY).

I have to chuckle at the length of this thread; I thought it an interesting link and figured there would be a couple of cw detractors that would answer, but the thread turned out a bit longer than I figured. I keep forgetting how heated the cw vs no cw arguement can get.

I'd have responded earlier, but yesterday was my birthday and .... well, I probably consumed enough beer to build a 160 meter half wave beer can vertical :)

Fortunately, the better half didn't get upset ;)

Ah yes, a vertical 'beverage' antenna! Our FD group had one for 20M, but we had to quit using it when our FD QTH changed to the football field of a local High School.

Anyhow, Happy Birthday!

You ask me "what is wrong with cw?" I ask you, "Why is amateur radio dying?"--I think the answer to both is a single one--there was a time when dropping code would have saved ham radio--I fear that time has come and gone... cw has no real use to anyone, anymore... it is like having to learn to type to use the internet... no such requirement... however, because typing DOES have a use--you will find many learning to type after they realize the need...

... the "anateur exams" are certainly no hinderence, they always have been as simple as pie--a college grad trained in the art of "test taking" could study for a day and pass the most challenging... they have been made even simplier still... yet amateur radio declined and continues to do so--

... now "critical mass" has been reached, so many other forms of communication exist that amateur radio is on its' death march... radios are so far and few between... and so little demand... they are too expensive with most to bother with... you could give ham licences away in the streets and not improve that...

... no, the OMs' alzheimers and lack of ability to see the future has killed ham radio--you'd think the old guys must have hated it--to have stood by and watched it die--if what you say is correct--and they DID have all their mental facilities about them and still allowed it...

Warmest regards,
John

With you as his prophet ? Take me first , please lord !!
FL SAYS; Dude, I am no prophet, just a simple messenger who KNOWS the end days are here and is just issuing you sinners a simple warning, repent, your time is now very short.

MAKE FAST EASY MONEY USING YOUR PAYPAL ACCOUNT!
Comments:
MAKE FAST EASY MONEY USING YOUR PAYPAL ACCOUNT!
MAKE MONEY FAST WITH ONLY $3.00. THIS REALLY WORKS !
Make from $20,000 to $50,000 in as little as 4 -6 weeks with only an initial investment of $3,by using a simple secure internet account called Paypal, that takes only a few minutes to join and get started.
I've actually taken the 10 minutes it requires to join this wacky bunch of optimists and I'm hoping that there are others out there that will spare the change to try this.
READ ON : I found this on a bulletin board and decided to try it. "A little while back, I was browsing through news groups and came across an article similar to this that said you could make thousands of dollars within weeks with only an initial investment of $3.00!
So I thought, "Yeah right, this must be a scam", but like most of us, I was curious, so I kept reading. Anyway, it said that you send only $1.00 to both of the 3 email addresses stated in this article.
You then place your name and address at the bottom of the list at the #3th position and email it to your friends as well as post this message (with your email address in the list) to at least 200 newsgroups.
(There are thousands) No catch, that was it. So after thinking it over, and talking to a few people first, I thought about trying it.
I figured "what have I got to lose except $3.00, right?" So I invested the measly $3.00. Well GUESS WHAT!!
Within days, I started getting money coming into my Pay Pal account! I was shocked! I figured it would end soon, but the money just kept coming in.
In my first week, I made about $25.00 which means that 25 people joined the group after they saw my posted messages.
By the end of the second week I had made a total of over $1000.00! In the third week I had over $10,000.00 and it's still growing.
This is now my fourth week and I have made a total of just over $42,000.00 and it's still coming in rapidly. It's certainly worth $3.00, and the few minutes it took to join Paypal.
I have spent more than that on the lottery!
Let me tell you how this works and most importantly, why it works. Also, make sure you print a copy of this article NOW, so you can get the information off of it, as you need it.
I promise you that if you follow the directions EXACTLY, that you will start making more money than you thought possible by doing something so easy!
SUGGESTION:
Read this entire message carefully! (Print it out or download it.)
Follow the simple directions and watch the money come in! It's that easy.
It's legal. And, your investment is only $3.00.
IMPORTANT: This is not a rip-off; it is not indecent; it is not illegal; and it is virtually no risk-it really works! If all of the following instructions are adhered to, you will receive extraordinary dividends.

AGAIN, PLEASE NOTE: Follow these directions EXACTLY, and $20,000 or more can be yours in 4 to 6 weeks. This program remains successful because of the honesty and integrity of the participants.
Please continue its success by carefully adhering to the instructions. In this business your product is not solid and tangible, it's a service. You are in the business of developing Mailing Lists.
Many large corporations are happy to pay big bucks for quality lists. However, the money made from the mailing lists is secondary to the income which is made from people like you and me asking to be included in that list.
Here are the 4 easy steps to success:
STEP 1:
Take a few minutes to join Paypal:
The Internet's most trusted Internet banking system for your future income.
When creating your Paypal account make sure you use the same Email address as your user name in the list below so people can send money to your account.
STEP 2
Once you have a Paypal account running, use Paypal to post $1 to EACH of the 3 Email Addresses below because you pay people with an email address in Paypal.
To do this you may need to use a credit card, which is very easy, and secure so nobody but Paypal may see it. If you don't have a credit card show this great lucrative offer to someone that has one and get them to help you pay the $3.
What you are doing is creating a service. This is absolutely legal! You are requesting a legitimate service and you are paying for it!
Like most of us I was a little skeptical and a little worried about the legal aspects of it all. But I looked around and did some homework and found it was perfectly legal.
Here are the 3 individual Email addresses that you have to send $1 to through Paypal for this to work properly and for you to receive money.
(If you don't send the money and decide to post the message with your name in it anyway, Paypal will instantly pick this up and terminate your account, immediately, besides the other penalties!!
If you did this you could get into serious trouble because it is fraud. (So follow the instructions and post the $3 and you will make lots of money with no hassles.)
Now send $1 to each of these following email - addresses through your paypal account: (Just in case you still haven't one yet, use this link to open one in your name, and pay $1 to each the following 3 email- addresses

1.) lucky_leester@yahoo.com

2.) quynhtuong@hotmail.com

3.) leech76@iprimus.com.au

STEP 3
Now take the #1 Email Address off the list that you see above, move the other Email Addresses up (3 becomes 2, 2 becomes 1) and add Your Email Address as number 3 on the list.
STEP 4
Change anything you need to, but try to keep this article as close to the original as possible.
Now, post your amended article to at least 200 newsgroups (there are thousands of groups).
And email your message to as many people you can But remember, the more you post and email the more money you make! This is perfectly legal!
If you have any doubts, refer to Sec. 1302 & 1241 of the Postal Lottery laws.
Keep a copy of these steps for yourself and, whenever you need money, you can use it again and again.
PLEASE REMEMBER that this program remains successful because of the honesty and integrity of the participants and by their carefully adhering to the directions.
You are simply paying into a money making chain of participants and if the chain is broken you are screwing someone else out of their fair share.
So, as each person who joins the family and the directions are followed, six members will be reimbursed for their participation as a List Developer with one dollar each.
You then insert your Email Address into the list and it will move up geometrically. So that when your name reaches the #1 position you will have potentially received thousands of dollars into your account!!!
What an opportunity for only a total of $3.00 !! $1 for each of the first three people listed above
To begin with, please send you're joining fee now and then add your own Email Address to the list and you're in business!
HOW TO POST TO NEWS GROUPS?
Use Netscape or Internet Explorer and try searching for various newsgroups(on-line forums, message boards, chat sites, discussions.)
Log on any search engine like yahoo.com,google.com,altavista.com, excite.com, etc., then search with the subject ''millionaire message board'' or''money making message board'' or ''employment message board''or ''money making discussions'' or ''money making forum'' or ''business message board'' etc.
You will find thousands & thousands of message boards. Click on them one by one and you will find the option 'post a new message'. Then Post this article as a 'new message' by highlighting the text of this letter and selecting copy then paste from the edit menu.
Fill in the Subject, this will be the header that everyone sees as they scroll through the list of postings in a particular group, click the post message button.
You're done with your first one! It only takes about 60 seconds to complete postings on message boards after you catch on.
REMEMBER, THE MORE NEWSGROUPS YOU POST IN, THE MORE MONEY YOU WILL MAKE!!
BUT YOU HAVE TO POST A MINIMUM OF 200!That is it You will begin receiving money in your account from around the world within days!
JUST MAKE SURE ALL THE ADDRESSES ARE CORRECT.

Now the WHY part out of 200 postings: Say I receive only 5 replies (a very low example). So then I made $5.00 with my name at #3 on the letter.
A - M - A - Z - I - N - G - !!
When your name is no longer on the list, you just take the latest posting in the newsgroups, and send out another $3.00 to Email Addresses using Paypal on the list, putting your name at number 3 again. And start posting again.
The thing to remember is that thousands of people all over the world are joining the Internet and reading these articles everyday.
JUST LIKE YOU ARE NOW!! So, can you afford $3.00 to see if it really works??
I think so!
People have said, "what if the plan is played out and no one sends you the money? So what!
What are the chances of that happenin when there are tons of new honest users and new honest people who are joining the internet & newsgroups everyday and are willing to give it a try ??
Anyway, it is only $3.00 for a chance at thousands. Estimates are at 20,000 to 50,000 new users, every day, with thousands of those joining the actual Internet.
Remember, play FAIRLY and HONESTLY and this will really work.
There's no use trying to cheat for only $3.00 ***
With warm wishes, bless you and your loved ones

All I have on the Sharp 2460 is RF adjustment T304, L302, L303. AMC is R112.
Hope this helps.

If they exhibited their typical condescending mentality or mannerisms like they do to the paying dealers/vendors in the outside flea market, this would not suprise me at all. I'd not even donate a cheap prize pair of dollar store headphones. BTW we really liked the condition of the dealer's parking lot this year!
The blacktop of the Hara Arena reminded me of a cross between the Lunar landscape and the San Andreas Fault in some places. As someone on the live chat commented quite accurately: '..the Hara should rent out their parking lot to Range Rover for Customer Test Drives
during the weekdays'.

Year after year less and less sellers. I attribute this to e-Bay, the cost of selling at the Hamvention and the ever diminishing returns. 9:00 AM on Sunday was positively dismal. I would say that fully 40% of the outside Vendors packed up and left on Saturday night.

This year was our last, Dayton is just not worth it anymore.
Better to sell it online and have the UPS Truck come to your house and pick the stuff up for delivery instead of carting it 500+ miles just to bring it all back home rain dampened again...

We heard the same story making the rounds
among the dealers on Saturday. Probably true.

> They spaced out many of the inside > vendor booth areas so it wasn't too obvious that > the number of vendors was way down.
> What did anybody else notice? I hope the above

Those spaces were a combination of that and a small number of dealers who decided not to go at all the last minute. The hamfest committee was hoping that alot of people would show up and pay for a space...like that was going to happen. (!)

I also saw several tables of 100% cell phone and computer junk which was a major disappointment. I would be rather PO'ed also if I paid $40 to get in and I saw standard flea market type vendors selling stuff that I could see, at any weekend mart FOR FREE and with no admission charge!

Forget it folks..
IMHO Dayton is finished, stick a fork into it.
It will never go back to what it once was Years ago
despite all the marketing and hype that they make it.
Oh there will always be the camaraderie and the new equipment showings, but the flea market is just about finished.
Stick to hamfests located with 30 miles of your QTH.

I agree. It looked more like a drive-in rummage sale than a hamvention at the outside vendors booths.

If it was so bad in years past, why did you go this year. My last trip to Dayton was about 1995 and my impression of the used equipment for sale outside was that it had been carted between too many other hamfests. And there was a surprising amount of non-radio electronic gear and parts. The inside was the usual glitzy trade show and one vendor actually had bikini clad women prancing around.

In my experience hamfests in general are showing lower attendance because of both internet-based competition and the ham radio hobby itself being on the far side of the growth and maturity curve.

In the Hamventions defense it's not their fault as to what is brought inside for sale. They're probably trying to do the best they can to put on a good event.

Agreed, most stuff is going to eBay these days, and no problem with that. Can't really fault a seller for wanting to move his/her equipment rather than waiting another year for Dayton.

I've seen the same here even with local fest's over the last number of years.

The Bottom Line:

Ham Op's in general and the Hamvention Committee and the DARA has yet to grasp that timeless law of Business MBA called: "The Law of Diminishing Returns".

http://cgi.ebay.com/ws/eBayISAPI.dll?ViewItem&item=5777071588

Im selling a Ranger RCI-2950 mobile transceiver with an after market Astatic D104 hand held microphone (stock mic included), and a Trip Lite 7 amp power supply.

The 2950 was modified to cover from 26Mhz - 32Mhz this included the 11 Meter Citizens Band. The radio was also modified for louder audio and higher modulating power.
I paid $359.99 for the radio new.

The Astatic D104 hand held is well known in the CB world as the best mic you can buy for mobile use. The mic is wired for the RCI-2950 using the 6 pin plug from the stock mic.
These sell anywhere for $50-80 bucks

The Trip Lite power supply is only 7 amps and will power the 2950 but should be upgraded to at least a 15 amp supply. I'm only including it because I no longer have a use for it. I bought this item used and it has surface rust on the metal casing.

This bundleis worth well over $400.00 new and I will part with the lot for as little as $200.00 that is what I set the reserve at on ebay. The starting bid is $5.00
Happy Bidding.

PS there are photos of all the listed items on the ebay listing.

Happy B-day guy.

Our club group built a 3 element 160 meter yagi out of steel beer cans for a Field Day one year.

Difficult premise, coupled with a fuzzy definition. What does "dying" mean to you? If you're going to assert that amateur radio is dying, then you need to come up with a working definition of "dying" so that others can decide if you're right.

My problem is that, when I review the statistics, there isn't any such process which can be clearly identified. True, over the very recent past the total number of licenses has declined, but that decline is on the order of 2% since April, 2004. If the baseline is made longer, and totals going back to 1995 are examined, a 2% change in the total amateur population is seen to lie well within the noise (two year variance). It is therefore difficult to decide if it is significant without resorting to a detailed statistical analysis.

My sense is that it isn't significant (yet). It looks as though the trend line (least-squares, linear fit) is horizontal, and only additional time will tell if it really has a negative slope.

To reiterate, those who run around claiming that "amateur radio is dying" can't seem to either articulate what "dying" means or to prove their case.

And as the old Shania Twain song says, "That don't impress me much."

All I have ever seen anyone use a D104 for is making a cheap radio sound like an even cheaper walmart, price reduced, sale item (those guys sure never heard quality audio in their life!)... who wants to talk to some idiot that sounds like a mentally impared weirdo screaming into a mike with a bad lisp and naturally distorted voice...

Hello, John

I suspect that Morse testing will be dropped. When, I'm not sure, but some countries have done so already. I honestly believe (but could be wrong) that most of the older amateurs (say the 20 wpm extra gang of which I am one) do not believe that Morse should be required.

Hopefully, that will end some of the contention amongst some of us. The reality is that amateur radio does need some infusion of young blood. Having just celebrated my 58th birthday, I can appreciate that LOL.

There are a lot of different forms of communication. I suspect that some people will be attracted to amateur radio simply because of the vast amount of experimentation that can be done at reasonable powers (you don't need kilowatts, but a few milliwatts may not suffice).

I've been moderating one Yahoo group (and now co-own it) which is devoted to helping folks get their tickets. The biggest thing is not to have the hams flame the cbers or scanner enthusiasts. We are all interested in radio (or television - or other modes, for that matter) and the flame wars are the biggest deterrent (not Morse code), at least in my mind. Flame wars do not happen. Moderation until folks calm down and removal or even banning if they continue. There are too many good folks in cb and amateur radio (not to mention scanner and sw folks) to let the flamers wreck everything.

As far as mental ability, I tried like heck to kill mine when I celebrated my birthday. The only result was a big headache LOL.

You and I might have a minor disagreement, but it appears you are willing to discuss it. So am I. As to typing, I had an interview some number of years ago and when it was mentioned that the individual that was to be replaced was producing their newsletter, I mentioned that I could type over 65 words per minute on a bad day into a headwind. When they said "we don't type anymore, we use computers", I stated that I believed it was time to call a halt to the interview. Certainly keyboards have changed a bit (I remember close to 50 years ago, my father had an old typewriter with a "cents" figure on it), but the keys (alpha and numerics) are laid out the same. Yes, the computer keyboard has an extra set of keys with numbers (use the numbers lock) on it. Still, I have no problem with 65 words per minute. I admit I'm down a bit from the time I had to fight a 100 word per minute teletype to get burst of 92 words per minute out, but I still have no real problem either typing or programming.

Some of us are trying to pass the torch to younger folks. The plain fact is that amateur radio need younger folks (not to mention more women).

If you might be interested in joining, please e-mail me off group. The address is aa2qa@frontiernet.net

Hello, Sharkie

My bad. I meant 700 watt system - not something from the 70s LOL. All Bose speakers. A couple hundred watts on the bass alone (and it does shake, although I keep the volume down).

Good to hear from you too. I'm not really mad, just disappointed that folks don't understand the need for regulation. I have a dog and she stays in the house for the most part. When I have her out, if she barks more than a few times, I bring her in. The neighbors don't need to hear a dog barking for 20 minutes or more. Same thing with the stereo system.

Heck, I've made a mistake in the past. Had a party with the Hammond turned up pretty well (as well as the Leslies) and the cops showed up. I apologized and shut it off. Never done that since (and that was 25 years ago). No biggie; anyone can make a mistake.

According to whom? Link please. That statement in itself is meaningless. "Not fairing well" could simply means that we're a little behind schedule. I suppose you consider the establishment of an independent Iraqi government as not an important achievement?

Yea sure. When you stand up for what is right, you're bound to take a few on the chin in the process. Those who refuse to stand up, out of fear of taking those few on the chin, are the ones to be very afraid of.

I seek the truth, and I place blame where the blame belongs, and that starts with those who seek to destroy this country out of a ideological hatred of our way of life. I don't blame the one leader with the cajones to call it like it is and stand up to it.

The liberals, on the other hand, when the truth cleverly evades them, make up their own version of the truth to justify actions which would,
in an earlier generation, be considered treason.

This isn't about Bush, this is about a trusted news organization which recklessly printed a story which turned out to be bogus, which resulted in the deaths of 17 people, and incited further anti-U.S. behavior. Which begs the question , who's side is Newsweek on?

Those who are too dumb or lazy to get a license like to parrot the old

How many links do you need, Dave?

Here are a few more, just to keep you entertained.

From the Times wires:

Before the Iraq invasion, the Bush administration asserted that Iraq possessed chemical and biological weapons and was developing nuclear weapons. Officials also allege Iraq was working on prohibited long-range missiles and drones that could disperse biological agents. The presidential intelligene commison examined each of the US intelligence community's prewar assertions on Iraq's weapons of mass destruction and reached these conclusions:

Nuclear Weapons: Wrong
Analysts wrongly interpreted the purpose of some metal tubes Iraq tried to import, arguing they were for centrifuges to enrich uranium when they were for conventional artillery rockets. Other imports of materials with more than one potential use were also similarily misinterpreted.

Biological Weapons: Wrong
Agencies trusted several Iraqi defectors who were lying, ignoring inconsistencies in their statements and other warning signs that these defectors were providing false information.

Chemical Weapons: WRONG
The intelligence committe drew its conclusions from satellite photos of trucks and buildings and other sources that were suspicious but ultimately ambiguous, and trusted human sources who made claims that Hussein had accomplished things that are technically impossiible.

WMD-Armed Drones: Wrong
Analysts concluded the drones were for WMD based on limited information; Iraq;s drones turned out to be for reconnaissance.

Hussein's Intentions: Wrong
Intelligence agencies did not seriously consider Hussein could have given up his WMD ambitions and destroyed his stockpiles. Although several intel sources asserted before the war that Iraq did not have any WMD, US analysts have regarded this as disinformation.

End of Times wire report.

Want more, Dave? The list is endless but these should have you spinning your wheels a bit more than usual since your first knee-jerk reaction was to deny any Bush failures, then beg for examples.

THE MOST IMPORTANT QUESTION OF YOUR LIFE

This is the most important question of your life.

The question is: Are you saved?

It is not a question of how good you are, nor if you are a church member, but are you saved?

Are you sure you will go to Heaven when you die?

The reason some people don't know for sure if they are going to Heaven when they die is because they just don't know.

The good news is that you can know for sure that you are going to Heaven.

The Holy Bible describes Heaven as a beautiful place with no death, sorrow, sickness or pain.

God tells us in the Holy Bible how simple it is to be saved so that we can live forever with Him in Heaven.

"For if you confess with your mouth Jesus is Lord and believe in your heart that God raised Him from the dead, you will be saved." (Romans 10:9)

Over 2000 years ago God came from Heaven to earth in the person of Jesus Christ to shed His blood and die on a cross to pay our sin debt in full.

Jesus Christ was born in Israel supernaturally to a virgin Jewish woman named Mary and lived a sinless life for thirty-three years.

At the age of thirty-three Jesus was scourged and had a crown of thorns pressed onto His head then Jesus was crucified.

Three days after Jesus died on a cross and was placed in a grave He rose from the dead as He said would happen before He died.

If someone tells you that they are going to die
and then three days later come back to life and it actually happens then this person must be the real deal.

Jesus Christ is the only person that ever lived a perfect sinless life.

This is why Jesus is able to cover our sins(misdeeds)
with His own blood because Jesus is sinless.

The Holy Bible says, "In Him(Jesus) we have redemption
through His blood, the forgiveness of sins..."
(Ephesians 1:7)

If you would like God to forgive you of your past, present and future sins just ask Jesus Christ to be
your Lord and Saviour.

It doesn't matter how old you are or how many bad
things that you have done in your life including
lying and stealing all the way up to murder.

Just pray the prayer below with your mouth and mean it
from your heart and God will hear you and save you.

Dear Jesus Christ, I want to be saved so that I can have a home in Heaven with You when I die. I agree with You that I am a sinner. I believe that You love me and want to save me. I believe that You bled and died on the cross to pay the penalty for my sins and that You rose from the dead. Please forgive my sins
and come into my heart and be my Lord and Saviour.
Thanks Lord Jesus Christ for forgiving me and saving
me through Your merciful grace. Amen.

Welcome to the family of God if you just allowed God
to save you.

Now you are a real Christian and you can know for sure that you will live in Heaven forever when this life
comes to an end.

As a child of God we are to avoid sin(wrongdoing), but if you do sin the Holy Bible says, "My dear children,
I write this to you so that you will not sin. But if anybody does sin, we have one who speaks to the Father
in our defense Jesus Christ, the Righteous One."

Those of you that have not yet decided to place your
trust in the Lord Jesus Christ may never get another chance to do so because you do not know when you will die.

Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth and the life: no one can come to the Father(God)(in Heaven), but by me."
(John 14:6)

This means that if you die without trusting in Jesus Christ
as your Lord and Saviour you will die in your sins and be forever separated from the love of God in a place called Hell.

The Holy Bible descibes Hell as a place of eternal torment, suffering, pain and agony for all those who have rejected Jesus Christ.

The good news is that you can avoid Hell by allowing Jesus Christ to save you today. Only then will you have true peace in your life knowing that no matter
what happens you are on your way to Heaven.

Praise the Lord!
Servant of the Lord Jesus Christ

No, it's a simple matter of you wanting to pin every failing on Bush, when, if you truly understood how the government operates, you would not make such an ignorant, uninformed claim. Military budgets have to be approved by congress, a congress in which Kerry voted against (after he voted for) the necessary money to provide that equipment you feel we were glaringly lacking.

>Bush is cutting military funding and it has nthing to do with Kerry.

He is merely doing the same things as many corporations. Making due with less. Unless, you want a large tax increase.

The president didn't fly airplanes into the trade towers or the pentagon. The president didn't try to annex a neighboring country. correct.

I bought it brand new in 1996. And even 9 years later, it's still worth more than that scow you take people out fishing in order to earn the money to pay for your webTV subscription.

>Just because you overpaid doesn't mean others will subscribe to your

My boat is worth every penny that I'm asking for it, according to most surveys that I've researched. It's not like in Florida where the sun kills gelcoat in a year's time, and salt water exposure corrodes everything metallic. My boat is garage kept and as clean as the day I bought it. The summer season hasn't even hit yet. The weather isn't all that great right now. Sooner or later I expect some interested buyer activity.

But I'm not in a hurry. If I don't sell it this year, there's always next. I just had an itch for a new boat, but I can wait. Next year's bonus added in might give me enough extra money to buy one without selling the old one right away.......

Pity. Most familiar with cb are very familar with the quality hand held D104s like the one you refer, but are just learning about. Two models, the M6b and the M6c are very stealth and they rock! Nothing at all like the lollipop D104 sound.

Cb doesn't look for FM broadcast-like audio,,,,,when one becomes that concerned with their audio and they blame everyone else on the band for poor audio, it's time to move on to hammie radio, completely bypassing the nocode and going to the next level.

try this link.

http://www.unmovic.org/

It is gives all the reporrtts to present of the "on goning inspections"

This is the link to the UN Security Council Working Document as presented to the UN Security Council on Mach 3 of 2003. Please pay attention to Annex 2. It is quite revealing. It in fact shows how well the UNSCOM inpsections were working prior to being booted out in 1998.

http://www.un.org/Depts/unmovic/new/documents/draft_work_programme.pdf

We may never know how much there really was or how much was destroyed.
But it is now becoming a foregone conclusions that the large potentials that Colin Powell claimed in his Power Point Presentation on Feb. 5, 2003 are at best in retrospect worst case analysis. Did this administration inflate the potentials of WMD? Maybe not, but they did harp extensively on the worst case potentials. As time has shown the reality is that either Saddam destroyed alot just before the invasion or there never were the large stock piles of WMD that Bush and company had envisioned.

There are more links. You can also start at www.fas.org. Look not for just what supports ones belief but look at all the facts presented. In between the two extremes will really lie the truth. IF you start to dig further into the past, you may starrtt to derive some other conclusions. I came to an understanding in late 2002 that Iraq and any invasion was not about WMD or OIL. It is far more deeper. The true paranoia that this administration has is a great fear of a large Islamic state existing from Pakistan to Syria. Including Iran, Iraq, Saudia Arabia and a few others.

Just think what if Radical Islam controled over half the oil production in the world?

Hello, Dave

I've been really laughing over this thread. Yep, the deficit is huge ... and when folks wake up, the Democrats will get blamed for "raising taxes". We are in deep doo - doo here. Reaganomics didn't work then and it doesn't work now.

As to the marriage protection act that Bush was for, have we heard anything else about that, or was it to get a big reaction (along with votes) from the religious folks?

One question begs for an answer: what is the divorce rate in this country? Care to help Social Security? I'd suggest that once a couple divorces, they can no longer give nor receive Social Security benefits from another person (sole exception being to children). I've heard the divorce rate is close to 50%, but I honestly don't know.

I worked for a manager who was on his third or fourth wife. Hmmmm .... I'm wondering if a woman (or man, for that matter) ever questions why their intended has been divorced three times. I knew a guy (he passed away over 30 years ago) that was marrying his fifth wife! When he passed away, he was living with a girl friend a good 20 years younger than he.

A lot of interesting questions come to mind with many of these threads, but few answers.

Nope, I'm not for gay marriage, but I question what is it that drives these big knee-jerk reactions. I fear that once folks wake up and smell the coffee, it will be too late. In fact, it may already be too late. If other countries stop "lending" us money and allowing our deficit to continue, we are in for a crash. 1929 will look like a picnic. Many countries are fearing us. Not only for the "Rambo" style of Bush, but our deficit. If we crash, it will have a huge effect on the rest of the world as well.

Why do you think OPEC doesn't peg their target to the US dollar anymore? (hint: the dollar is falling and OPEC wants to make more. I read an article that Saudi Arabia wants to build an indoor skiing resort (talk about an air conditioning bill!) as well as an underwater hotel.

Hello, Dave

Since being in contact with a few friends who are so severely on the extreme right, I have found the best way to get news is outside of the United States. Whatever article is written here, it is dismissed as work of the demonic liberal left.

I have found the U.K., Canada, and Australia to be pretty nifty places. Of course, the world is just loaded with the liberal left ... :))

Hitler did a pretty good job convincing his people as to what was right and wrong.

I am not so easily persuaded.

Hello, Dave

I ranted a bit about our deficit and economy. We know many jobs went to Mexico and now to China.

Yep, we are the real technocracy leaders. Guess who launched Direct TV's new satellite? Perhaps I should send you a link:

Really reassuring, isn't it.

It seems my cb is coming through my am/fm radio when it's off. It's a stock radio and the tip of my antenna is about 50 feet off the ground. I am using rg-8 coax.
My question is do they make some kind of filter to help prevent this.

Real trick to get the RFI with the radio off... however, it isn't comming though the powerlines is it, can the radio be moved to another rooms outlet (farther from the outlet of the transmitters?)

Better yet, the am/fm isn't dual power and you can unplug it from the wall and see if it still happens on batteries?

Warmest regards,
John

You STUPID HUMANIOD, Don't you know that keyclowns have the MOST FUN on the air when they are using SUPERIOR RADIOS LIKE RCI's Galaxy's, Superstars, and such! Export radios are THE only radios to use cause
THEY are the most fun to use. You STUPID HUMANIOD!!!!!!!!!

Know the feeling :) I had my cousins out last year, Thursday night and was out in my backyard 2 minutes past 10, started heading into the house and they came a running out and said the music was keeping their kid awake. Went over the next morning, Six pack & bottle of wine in hand as an apology, the wife says "oh you were keeping me awake". I mean, it's not like I do this but once every 3 years, show a little patience., I do when they start firing off fireworks into the air, midweek after 10pm.

If. in fact, they do "raise taxes", it would be their fault. I do not let a large deficit bother me. We've had large deficits before, and it didn't kill us

I don't know about that. The end of a recession and the beginning of the biggest period of economic growth followed "Reaganomics".

That's a good question. One answer might be that there are more pressing issues right now (Run away filibusters, the war, getting an energy bill passed etc.).

>One question begs for an answer: what is the divorce rate in this country?

According to the stats from:

http://www.census.gov/population/socdemo/hh-fam/cps2003/tabA1-all.xls the percentage of divorced people is 9.6%. For some reason, Frank was unable (or unwilling) to read the columns and see the actual numbers, but if you believe the census bureau, that's what it is.

>Care to help Social Security?

The best way to help it is to remove it, and divert all former SS withholdings into individual 401K accounts. Of course that penalizes those who have already given into the SS program for their entire working lives. So the transition has to be gradual so to be fair to everyone.

9.6% according to the 2003 census.

That would certainly send up a red flag for me. But, like they say, love is blind and it's hard to be rational when all of your blood is rushing to another organ in your body.

Then hopefully he died a happy man, although I would question his inability to remain faithful, and wonder if there weren't some "issues" affecting him.

>A lot of interesting questions come to mind with many of these threads, but

That's the nature of debate, especially on subjects where answers are elusive and somewhat subjective. There would be no point is debating if the earth is round or whether the moon is made of green cheese, as we know the answers to those questions.

>Nope, I'm not for gay marriage, but I question what is it that drives these

I usually apply Newton's law of action vs. reaction. Someone does something extreme and the opposite side responds with a equal and opposite reaction. There wouldn't be such an outpouring of opposition to gay marriage if there wasn't such a push to legalize it.

> I fear that once folks wake up and smell the

That won't happen, because, like it or not, we live in a global economy, and if we "crash", we take the rest of the world with us.

>fearing us. Not only for the "Rambo" style of Bush, but our deficit. If we Exactly! I don't doubt for a minute that the pseudo-elitist socialist Europeans would pass up any opportunity to put the screws to us economically. But even they realize that if they do, they do so at their own peril.

>Why do you think OPEC doesn't peg their target to the US dollar anymore?

By basing their target price on another currency, they get more U.S. dollars if the dollar is weak. OPEC knows that the dollar will rise again, and so will the value of their "investment". It's no surprise that oil prices have been falling as of late, which is coincident with a strengthening dollar.

>(hint: the dollar is falling and OPEC wants to make more. I read an article

Hey, if they have the money, more power to them. Although, that sort of materialism smacks against the core values of Wahabbism and radical Islam. Maybe we are affecting the middle east more than we thought....

Well, shrinking, anyway. The total number of US hams is down slightly from the peak of a few years ago, while the total US population continues to grow.

But I would note that the shrinkage occurred after the April 2000 reductions in both Morse Code and written testing for all available license classes. IOW, making the licenses easier to get in 2000 did not result in sustained growth.

Looking further back, examine the growth from 1990 or 1991 to 2000. (1990 is when medical waivers made it possible to get any amateur license with a 5 wpm test, and 1991 is when the Technician lost its code test. Then compare the growth in that 9 year period to the growth in an equal period of time before 1990 or 1991. You'll find that the overall increase in the '80s was greater than in the '90s.

So if that is the case, are we not justified in trying to prevent it

Do we have to wait until the "west" (Which includes more than just the U.S,) is brought to its knees economically before we act?

How much bloodshed could have been averted if Hitler had been taken out of the picture in the 1920's?

Does the average citizen need to know, or have the capacity to understand, the complete truth assuming we can definitively identify it amongst all the free flowing propaganda?

There is a great deal of truth in that. The major news media has been infiltrated, as have much of academia, with the followers of left leaning politics. This has been going on in ernest since the 60's and the Vietnam war, when it was realized that the only way for a small political minority to win their objective of large scale governmental reform, was from within through slow, careful indoctrination and propaganda. The two best places to achieve that goal are in the agencies which bring us the news, and the institutions which educate our impressionable young.

It had been working fairly well, until the advent of the internet, talk radio, and independent news services such as Fox News. The ability to cross check the news and parse out the spin, essentially put the spotlight on the mainstream news media, and people like Dan Rather and Jayson Blair. Exposure of such radical leftists in teaching roles such as Ward Churchill, and countless others, is slowly revealing the true intentions of these seemingly unconnected (except for ideology) people. The rise of conservative groups and watchdog organizations to balance the prejudice of the left on university campuses, will hopefully slow and eventually correct much of the damage that the left has done in the last 30 years.

>I have found the U.K., Canada, and Australia to be pretty nifty places. Of >course, the world is just loaded with the liberal left ... :))

You have to understand that in much of the world, especially in the socialist-leaning countries like France and Germany, there is a decidedly anti-capitalist, anti-US slant. So if you think you will get an objective news piece from any of them, you are seriously naive. As for the U.K., Canada, and Australia, they are more balanced but depending on which factions are backing the "news", you could be reading either left or right wing slant. It helps to dig deeply into who backs these groups in order to determine just how "objective" they may or may not be.

>Hitler did a pretty good job convincing his people as to what was right and >wrong.

Yes, and just like Hitler blamed all or most of Germany's problems on the Jews, so to are the operatives on the left trying to blame most of America's problems on rich, God respecting, white people.

Even after -MONTHS- of discussion on the topic you -STILL- don't get
it. I'll make this -really- simple so even -you- can understand it:

This is not a "majority rule" country -- it's a country based on the recognition of individual rights and freedoms. You have the right to think freely, to speak your opinions openly, to exercise religion as you see fit, to make your own decisions without government influence, etc, etc; and these rights and freedoms are guaranteed -REGARDLESS- of the opinions of any special-interest group, EVEN IF they represent the majority, and EVEN IF you are a member of that "majority".

The USA is NOT a democracy -- it's a country based on EQUAL RIGHTS and FREEDOMS for EVERY citizen, the "Moral Majority" be damned. If you don't like it, leave -- hell, I'll even buy your plane ticket! But if you decide to stay, shut the fuck up because you are effectively undermining the integrity of this country with your lies, propoganda, and warped interpretations of the Constitution; and I won't sit by and let that happen because I took an oath to defend both the Constitution and the country.

Either you are for the Constitution or you are against it. So it's time for you to make a choice, Dave -- are you an American or not?

1) Is this shrinkage due to...
a. Less new applicants
b. Increased attrition

2) Are easier tests the cause of the shrinkage...
a. Yes
b. No

Wrong. Ice provides carbon dioxide samples that are available for any given year. These samples are measured for C14 concentrations, fossil fuels having a much lower concentration of C14 than natural processes.
The difference is quantified as the percentage of CO2 contributed by combustion of fossil fuels. Therefore, the contribution of atmospheric CO2 from human sources is very accurately measured.

The answer is A because loyalty must be earned, and American's have a very good long-term memory.

>Considering that other countries have no objection to using cheap

American workers could be easily protected with import tariffs; but Bush's butt has been kissed (and licked, sucked, wiped and powdered) by corporations seeking cheap labor, so he is pushing for open-border trade agreements with third-world countries.

Because the taxes are on the Americans, not on the import corporations (e.g, Walmart, aka 'China Inc.') where they should be.

Depends on where that 'foreign' product was made.

Any US corp that chooses to cut American jobs instead of lobbying for import tariffs against foreign competitors is, in the most tactful of

No, it's not. It's a hope. Inflation, in a free market economy, is an 'equalizer' -- it's an effect of a surplus of cash in circulation, which usually ends up in the hands of those who need it the most. Historically, inflation hurts the rich and benefits the poor, which is something you never hear from the "left-wing, liberally biased media".

Cheap labor will always be available in any country that's poor in natural resources. There are many, and that's not going to change anytime soon. The fact that Iraq's new "government" refused to allow labor unions (a law imposed by Saddam) should be a good indication as to where the next market for cheap labor will be found.

For some reason, you were unable (or unwilling) to accept the clear statement by the Census Bureau that they do not keep track of marraige and divorce rates. And for some reason, you were unable (or unwilling) to explain how you derived the divorce rate from the table you cited.

So your solution is to simply eliminate Social Security? Hey, neat idea, but you can't "divert" what you don't have, and the Reps have tapped the SS trust fund so deep that there isn't anything to "divert". Bush's solution to SS is a "credit-card" retirement plan,

Bush made it that way. In addition, in countries around the world, it is extremely unsafe for Americans to travel abroad. It was never like that until Bush took office and the only thing he made safer was the bet that he was going to take this country into debt and get a bunch of our people killed for reasons that even you can't seem to place in proper context.

There's that arrogance. No Dave, I am fairly comfortable when I say the majority would claim Jimbo, at almost 20 years your senior, is not naive in the ways of the world and their news. In fact, I would hedge that his experience abroad in the military exposed him to much more than yourself regarding worldwide knowledge and news, and therefore, it is your claim, if any, that is "naive".
You again are claiming the news is biased to the left. Since the news is all biased to the left, (you have been asked this before), what source is it from which you get your misinformation?

Oh, but you have problems. You have always neatly presented you hold other views (such as an American political party other than yours) in contempt, but to publicly claim the democrats are akin to nazis really illustrates your magnified ignorance. It is the Bush admin that has paraphrased Stalin and invoked the exact same rhetoric. When Bush-the-ignorant was informed that he paraphrased Stalin in one of his speeches, he never repeated it again and that was the end of it. The utterance? "You are either with us or against us". No I think Iraq is means of gaining bases in a region that we can better monitor and track the goings on of the Radical Islamic Fundamentalist, both Shia and Suni.

That is a tough decision. If you act to early on intelligence and it dead people. The better question and also the most difficult to answer

We can play that game back to Babylonian Kings of the third millenium BC. That is really a poor argument. The case for preemption is just that. In 2002 Bush never made a good case for preemption. Duh! Last time I reviewed my civics and political science notes, I thought the American People were the government. You may find it acceptable to blindly follow your elected officials like those in Hitler Germany! Son I have a great deal of intreped feelings when a President says to me trust me I am keeping the best interests of the American People at heart and then proceeds to beat around the bush, no pun intended, trying to justify a preemptive invasion.

Hell yes the American People need to know. Secrecy is the death toll of a democracy and a republican form of government. This administrtation has been the most secret since Reagan's first term. Then I look and see who is advising GW Bush and then it all become to clearly now. Bush's advisors are out of the Cold War Era and need an enemy. I wonder if there is not one then have they created one?

Ham radio just isn't very appealing to the current generation. There are too many other things to compete, computers, the Internet, vidoe games. Kids had rather be skilled at playing the latest video game than have technical skills in some outdated (to them) mode of communication. They had much rather build a computer than a radio. Who needs a ham radio station to talk to someone in another state or even in another country, just whip out the cell phone. Almost every teenager now has one.

Let's get real, there are two of our VERY LARGE, VERY expensive buildings missing in New York. Thousands of Americans died in those buildings. There was a large hole in our pentagon, site of our most holy protection for this land. One plane was headed towards the Whitehouse, another of our most holy political sites--before it was downed. There are a few airplanes of ours which were destroyed in these attacts--and American lives lost on each and everyone of these aircraft.

Anyone who does not want to go after those who did THAT, with every resource at our disposal, is either a coward, terrorist themselves, or an idiot. And, the radical muslims will point blank tell you that you have three choices--join them, be enslaved by them or die. Any rational person would choose a fourth--they die!

We simply don't have a choice in this matter...

It is obvious there is a decline in interest in amateur radio, I think the reasons are many, since the gear is constructed for such a small "nitch" of users--the equip is expensive--this is only one more reason for the decline.

I have never heard anyone complain the exams were too difficult (of course, I am mainly around college age kids who go for a license), it is always the code--they hate it--some can be pushed to complete the code to get the license--after, they simply never use the code again...most of these young fellows are interested in GHz freqs and above...and how a computer can be interfaced with the radio...

Pity. Most familiar with cb are very familar with the quality hand held

Cb doesn't look for FM broadcast-like audio,,,,,when one becomes that

>From what I can see at hamdata.com and AH0A.org, it seems to me that the number of new hams has been slowly increasing since at least 1997 (which is as far back as AH0A.org goes) but attrition has been rising even faster.

How much of the attrition increase is due to "involuntary" causes (SKs, hams in nursing homes, etc.) vs. "voluntary"
causes (loss of interest) is a matter of pure speculation.
I don't have good data on that one way or the other.

It does seem to me, however, that when a survey says 22% of recently-licensed new hams interviewed have never set up their own station and gotten on the air with it, something's amiss in the "interest" department.

We sometimes see statistics about the "average age of US hams today is XX" and predictions of doom for the future as today's hams become SKs. What we don't see are statistics on how the "average age" was computed (mean? median? mode?) nor the age distribution (bell curve? exponential?). Nor do we see stats on what the "average age" was 10, 20, 30 years ago.

Looking around at club meetings and hamfests isn't a good sample because a lot of us don't go to those things very often.
>
> 2) Are easier tests the cause of the shrinkage...
> a. Yes
> b. No

No good way to tell. One thing is certain: The test reductions have not resulted in a flood of new hams compared to before the test reductions.

One possible explanation is that the real problem is publicity and image, not license requirements.

If people don't know what ham radio is, the license requirements have no effect on them.

Another factor is that if the license requirements are made "too easy", what you may have are some folks who have a license but no station because it's "too difficult" for them to set one up. Then they forget about ham radio and go on to something else.

One thing I remember clearly from my newcomer days as a 12-13 year old is that once I found out what amateur radio was, and how to get started, the license requirements were "not a problem". They were simply a challenge. If there had not been a Novice license, I simply would have gone for General right out of the box.

A lot of the kids I knew then, and know now, are the same way when they are interested in something.

In theory, no lives should be expendable. Reality paints a different picture. As long as the radical Islamists are willing to sacrifice their own lives in order to take out "infidels", the dynamics of that equation changes somewhat. When the value of human life differs from one side to the other, our "leverage" becomes limited.

In the cold war, we managed to keep "the evil empire" at bay due to the concept of mutually assured destruction. When your new enemy consists of people who are not afraid to die (and their reward received in Heaven) to advance their cause, a concept such as M.A.D.

starts to crumble.

Woah! Back up and drop the Hitler metaphors. This is not about dictatorship, but about the ineptitude, indifference, and general lack of understanding of "big picture" politics by the average American. We elect representatives to carry out America's business in our best interests so that "we the people" do not have to. If the government had to disclose each and every piece of intelligence with the population at large, they would, at the very least, create a national security issue, and at the worst create confusion and panic as the average citizen tries to come to grips with what they've just been told.

>Son I have a great deal of intreped feelings when a

There is a reason why we have a representative democracy and not a direct democracy. We elect people who are supposedly trained in the skills necessary to carry out our business. The last thing we need to do is second guess the motives of our leaders without concrete proof that such questioning is warranted. Perpetuating the distrust of our leaders, are the minions of the news media, many of which are (consciously or not) furthering the agendas of people who would like nothing more than the fall of the democratic way of life in this country. What better way to incite an overthrow of a government than to create the impression that the leaders are "up to no good"? There are all sorts of conspiracies and supposed "reports" telling of all kinds of "dirty deals" done by our government for many years. They're freely available to anyone with the drive to research them. But not many of those stories are verifiable with hard facts. When you look into the backgrounds of those who print these stories, it becomes clear what their agendas are.

We are also the first since Vietnam, except for the brief Gulf war in 1991, to be actively engaged in long term military operations. That necessitates a certain amount of secrecy. Do you think our government was completely forthcoming with all intel during WWII or Vietnam?

>Then I look and see who is advising GW Bush and then it all become to

For that to be true then you would have to somewhat support the conspiracy theory which claims that 9/11/01 was orchestrated by our own government. Our enemy attacked us first. What happened afterward was just a succession of events placed into motion as a result of 9/11.

>every failing on Bush, when, if you truly >understood how the government operates,

>you would not make such an ignorant,

>uninformed claim.

My claim simply was Bush failed to balance the budget. It's a fact.
Also is a fact, is it appears to have struck a nerve with you, as you have gone from denying any Bush failures, to defending his failures.

>Military budgets have to be approved by >congress, a congress in which Kerry voted >against (after he voted for) the necessary >money to provide that equipment you feel we >were glaringly lacking.

Isn't me, it's the American families of the dead and the soldiers in the field, and the high ranking officers who first brought this to light.
This month's Maxim magazine printed a bunch of letters from the troops, signed with rank and names and where they are assigned in the middle east. Stars and Stripes, a very republican publication, also printed many letters from those serving. Number THREE on the soldiers complaint list is RUMSFELD, and ALL their letters confirm the exact opposite of everything you think you know about the war.
Bush is cutting military funding and it has nthing to do with Kerry.

>He is merely doing the same things as many >corporations. Making due with less. Unless,

>you want a large tax increase.

Yes, i would much rather have a tax increase to pay for adequate gear and protection for out soldiers. Many of us are not so galavant when trivializing the lives of our soldiers, as many of us don't put tax cuts, like yourself, above the lives of our soldiers.
Once again, you are not even aware of what your own party is undertaking.
Now Bush is cutting bases in the US to pay for his tax cuts and failing (admitted by the Pentagon) war, the same thing you blasted Clinton for daring to entertain a few years ago, and he didn't even do it.

> When did I "blast" Clinton for closing military >bases?

You blasted Clinton and claimed he was seeking to dismantle and "weaken" the military through budget cuts. You have a piss poor memory, Dave.

>Not the same thing.

Right,,because Bush is doing the military slashing, it must be ok.

> Bush is not eliminating >any crucial bases or programs.

Eliminate your poor choice of the subjective term "crucial" and your hypocrisy glares and you are left with no salient point.

>Rathergate, is a glaring example of one such >smear which got discovered before any real >damage could be done.

You are wired to focus on anything but responsibility. You seek abdication of the Bush failures through unrealistic self-denial,

>I seek the truth, and I place blame where the >blame belongs,

Except with the leader of the country...as I said, you seek abdication of responsibility.

>and that starts with those who seek to destroy >this country out of a ideological hatred of our >way of life.

Wrong,,,it begins and ends with the president.

>The president didn't fly airplanes into the trade

>towers or the pentagon.

Right,,,,he just failed to prevent it, as the Official 911 Report suggests...you know,,,the Presidential Commission he was against, then for investigating his administrations ill-preparedness and response to 911.

>The president didn't try to annex a neighboring >country.

Right....

> The president didn't exterminate hundreds of >thousands of his own people.

He's on his way with the number of dead in this war.

> The president didn't blow a hole in the USS >Cole.

Neither did Kerry.

>The president didn't blow up embassies. The >list goes on.

So do his failures, such as curbing more and more of our rights under the false guise of keeping us safer, when we are under more danger than ever before. In fact, puppets like you are programmed to incorrectly parrot that Bush has protected us since 911, when nothing is further from the truth. We have had several attacks on US soil since then, but Bush, keeping a perfect record, fails to apprehend those responsible.

> I don't blame the one leader with the cajones

>to call it like it is and stand up to it.

But's NOT standing up for anything...he's ignoring Dharfur, which is much worse bllodshed than Hussein EVER committed

>Dharfur does not threaten this country in any >way.

Neither did Hussein. Read the 911 Report.
Bush failed to stop the proliferation and spread of nukes, and N Korea is continuing to produce them,,three more nuke warheads by year's end with the rods they recently and publicly collected and announced that they are using them for nukes.

>The former soviet union has nukes. The >Chinese have nukes. So what? Now if Osama

>Bin Laden had a few, I'd be concerned. Or if >Saddam had been allowed to finish his nuke >program, I'd be concerned.

He wasn't working on one during the invasion. It's a shame you have to learn history for this group by denying it, then researching it for yourself when the proper links are placed in front of you.
Of course, Iran has solidified several more nukes in the time Bush has been lording over the oil glut,,,on it goes, yet you know little of it.

>What oil glut? Do you not read the >commodities page?

Clown. The commodities page has nothing to do with the world oil supply. It's a management problem, not one of supply and demand.

>The liberals, on the other hand, when the truth >cleverly evades them, make up their own >version of the truth to justify actions which >would, in an earlier generation, be considered >treason.

Bush was the only one to flipflop on his reasons for war, yet when thse reasons are applied equally to hostile countries, his position evaporates.

>.He has not flip flopped on any of his reasons.

Then perhaps you can explain what reasons were given the first time congress denied his plea to invade Iraq.

>They remain the same as always.

You're wrong. The reasons presented to congress each time had nothing to dow with each other. When he was denied the first time, he invoked a reason as "liberating Iraq". The second time, he claimed violations of the UN and that Hussein was amassing WMDS.

>Then there is the more recent Newsweek

>gaffe about flushing the Koran down a toilet

>(How does one flush a book down a toilet >anyway?).

They have port- a-potty's in Guantanamo, not toilets.

>I'm really interested in how you would know >that with any accuracy.

Stay focused and try not to fall off track and delve into personal realms again, Davey. I know it in the same manner I knew your party acknowledged global warming and you didn't.

>Which is how exactly?

Education. One that eludes you. I find it amusing you are always astonished at exactly "how" and "why" people know things you do not. This can partially be attributed to your narcism and refusal to accept anyone knows more than you.

>And for the record, I never denied global >warming,

You did.

>just questioned the amount of effect that >humanity has truly had on it.

Yes, after you initially denied it.

>The evidence is still inconclusive on this point,
>as I have provided in the links.

No, the evidence is most certainly conclusive, as my links were dated of last week. Once again, because you are unable to grasp the methods in which concentrations of certain gases can ascertain and pinpoint with extreme accuracy what is manmade and what is naturally occurring and released into the atmosphere, does not make it any less so.

>BTW, port-a-potti's don't flush.

All the more reason the story was suspect from the beginning.

>Yet you were ready to embrace it as another >reason to throw a dagger at Bush.

I did no such thing..one can always tell when your ego is waning, as you harriedly and sloppily begin misattributing things that were never said to those you love.

>Ah, so you've decided to print the information >without my permission eh? I knew you couldn't >resist the urge.

I don't need your permission to ask what is in the public domain.

>The why did you ask in the first place?

I asked for your explicit and implied permission to post related information. Do I have it?

>BTW, you need to either upgrade or trash your >"Spy" software (Or ask for a refund of that >$9.95).

Keep guessing all that you will never know.

_
Yet, you brokke FCC law by not providing it to the FCC.

>Are you retarded, or can you simply not read?

>You are mistaken about my current address.

When you take to lying about your wife and everything else you have lied about in the past, nothig you can say can ever regain a reputation for credibility. You destroyed any you had long ago.

>.Your "Cyber detective" software is out of date.

I have no software,,,besides,,webtv doesn't use software. Off you go, now,,,

>My current address IS the one on my FCC >license. The one you have is the OLD one.

>Stony creek road was were I was born and >raised and spent most of my CB career. I >.moved from there in 1999.

>You can verify this by going on QRZ and >loading the 1993 version of the callbook, and >then look at what address my call is listed >with.

I accept (once again) your apology. No one claimed the Stony Creek was your curretn address, Davie. Stop being so paranoid, as it leads to incredible gaffes in your behalf.

>What you think is irrelevant,

Aparently what I think is very relevant, as you deny the truth and menstruate over it. I now have you in such a freakin' tizzy, you are denying your own wife's name when it has been confirmed and you are scrambling to explain awwy everything I posted.

>How has it been confirmed?

Ahhh,,,,,I prefer to remain content in wacthing you self-tighten that noose. The squirming you share with us is good for a bit longer.

> Because YOU think it is? I am telling you, you >are dead wrong about my wife's name.

I know exactly what you say, but the fact is her exact name appeared on the change of address card submitted to the Post Office with the same address shared by you,,there. That's another small bit of information you were ignornat of..when one places a change of address card wioth the Post Office, if you fail to check the little box at the bottom that tells of your privacy, they SELL the information to listbrokers. Now, tell us how the Post Office gt it wrong, Dave...LMFAO!

In fact, she used to reside on Gravers Road, but you go on denying she is your wife because of the shame you rained down upon yourself.

>I never even heard of Gravers road.

Really? You grew up near there and never heard of it? Need the exact address on Gravers Road and then you can use the mapblast, eh?
Ok,,she was born in 1963 and lived at 1819 Gravers Road in Norristown.

>again you are mistaken

And you're sweating like a stuck pig.

> (We must be up to a >dozen things you've been wrong about now).

Cripes...this talk from you sounds just like it did when it was shown you lied about having a Phelps Stationmaster antenna.

>This is what happens when you play with >cyperspy wannabe software for $9.95.

Does that type software give that information? How about birthdates and applications for marriage on file with the state,,,including addresses?

It's not what I think, it's what more and more regs are conveying to you on a regualr basis.

>Name them.

Well, sure,,,Frank taugh you better regarding radio technical competency, you called him names and took issue with his career. Shark taught you better regarding your own state's driving laws, and he was attacked by "Geo" all of a sudden with homo remarks,,BTW, where is "Geo" these days? :)
Our British friend across the pond taught you about cb radios that come type accepted with what are legal roger beeps, but you denied that as well, screamed and begged for proof, was given it, and humbled. Jim tried talking to you about foreign news sources, and you called him naive. No Davie,,as is always the pattern, you blame everyone else when the problem is yourself.

_
Google hypocrite and your name, and you will find those who taught you better.

>.Nice dodge.

See above.

> But I drive a Ford.

A blue one whose license plates do not match the address given to the FCC as provided by law. Go ahead,,,,'splain! LMAO...

> Once again, name the people who agree with >your position and disagree with mine.

See above.

>and contrary to your wild imagination, you do >not represent the majority.

Contrary to your claims that have been corrected by the majority of the regs, it is yourself that is of the most radical, hypocritical, and of a minority position that is usually incorrect.

>.Prove it. Post the names, posts and other

Na-na-nee-nee-noo-noo,,,,"pwove it"

>Prove it.

See above.

> Other that you, Frank, and >occasionally Landshark, who actually even >gives enough of a crap about these jabs that >we exchange, to even chime in?

You are again under the mistaken and erroneous belief one must "chime in" to all exchanges in order to express they care?

>Well gee, how then are we supposed to know >that they disagree?

Care is not a "simile" for "disagree". When you figure that out, you may ask such questions.

>Did you buy Frank's crystal ball?

Dude, you are so far out, you can never regain composure.

>I'm not the one who's suggesting that I can >read minds in order to glean the opinions of >people who do not post their opinions here.

You invoked your schooling of your own free will. This is where your piss poor communication skill comes in to play. When one enters a topic in to a conversation, be prepared to substantiate it.

>.Just like you gave us the names and >addresses of all of your publishing gigs when >you once claimed to be a "professional >journalist"?

Exactly. I provided where I went to school and for who I was employed.
That horrible piss poor memory you have is partially responsible for your communication deficits.
If you are going to make the rules, you have to play by them too.
Otherwise, you're a hypocrite. Your constant excuses and whining about not having to defend your claims portray you exactly how you are viewed.....by the majority :)
You have not provided for one single piece of information you have provided here. Yet you expect others to do it. Hypocrisy.

>Your personal

>obsessive mania concerning my personal life

Yet it is you who is obsessively begging for personal info about me.

>C'mon, you can do better.

When you take to providing a contingent of explanations, it reiterates my perfect aim and accuracy.

From the Times wires:
Before the Iraq invasion, the Bush administration asserted that Iraq possessed chemical and biological weapons and was developing nuclear weapons. Officials also allege Iraq was working on prohibited long-range missiles and drones that could disperse biological agents. The presidential intelligene commison examined each of the US intelligence community's prewar assertions on Iraq's weapons of mass destruction and reached these conclusions:

Nuclear Weapons: Wrong
Analysts wrongly interpreted the purpose of some metal tubes Iraq tried to import, arguing they were for centrifuges to enrich uranium when they were for conventional artillery rockets. Other imports of materials with more than one potential use were also similarily misinterpreted.

Biological Weapons: Wrong
Agencies trusted several Iraqi defectors who were lying, ignoring inconsistencies in their statements and other warning signs that these defectors were providing false information.

Chemical Weapons: WRONG
The intelligence committe drew its conclusions from satellite photos of trucks and buildings and other sources that were suspicious but ultimately ambiguous, and trusted human sources who made claims that Hussein had accomplished things that are technically impossiible.

WMD-Armed Drones: Wrong
Analysts concluded the drones were for WMD based on limited information; Iraq;s drones turned out to be for reconnaissance.

Hussein's Intentions: Wrong
Intelligence agencies did not seriously consider Hussein could have given up his WMD ambitions and destroyed his stockpiles. Although several intel sources asserted before the war that Iraq did not have any WMD, US analysts have regarded this as disinformation.

So then, Bush is our enemy--it is our fault radical muslims wish to destroy American property--and kill Americans.

You want to tie our militaries hands over the fact that they didn't have these weapons--which we got there first and stopped them from getting them. Your suggestion it that we should have waited until they had them--then instead of smashing our own planes into those buildings they could have been much more successful with those weapons (chemical, biological, nuclear.) And then, we would have a right to stop them...

You argument that Iraq and Sadam were not Bin Laden is shallow--they have the oil money which financed him, they hold the same radical ideas--this is enough for them to die... I am not pleased with Saudi Arabia...

I am one would support our LARGEST nuclear bomb dropped square in the middle of Iran--if they even threaten to be a threat to us... and if it would only save one innocent American life...

no I elect representatives to do what I want. I don't elect them to go off and do as they see fit. This may not be what th eaverage American does but if they wish to jump off a cliff then so be it. Even a representative democracy can desolve into facism and dictatorship.
Remember Hitler was elected and he did not gain his dictatorship untill after he was in office. Then he convinced the Congress and the poeple of Gernamy that it was in the best interest that he and the leadership rebuild Germany. He asked for their trust in the leaderships work and not to worry that they had their best interest at heart.

The rate Congres s here is going in ten yrs we all will have to have papers to travel around in the US. Members in Congress want even more rigid Patriot Act enactment. I love that, they want the masses to give up civl liberties and make them feel it is patriotic to do so! Even call the law the "Patriot Act".

IF Americans don't wake up to the big picture it will be to late. In fact so many things are no win place that it may now be to late. One more 9/11 event and that may spell the end of most of our civil liberties. I bet Jefferson is rolling in his grave at the blind sheep the Americans have become.

You will sing a different tune when your $60K per yr job goes to China and your planned retirement of $120K+ dwindles down to $36K per yr.

Think who benifits from outsourcing?

Corporations. Why?

Consumers demand lower prices and Corparations are doing their best to give the consumers what they want. Sorry but cheap prices can't go on for ever. Once the world's cheap labor is exploited, consumer prices will rise like a Proton Rocket.

What happens when there are no more cheap labor countries like China?
Can you spell double digit inflation??? How about 20% per yr for about ten yrs. Maybe even longer or higher inflation rates.

Yes as the world's standard of living increases, so will inflation. I forsee 10 to 20% annual inflation rates somewhere in the 2030 to 2040
time frame. By then the world will dream of 4% inflation rates.

Out sourcing is eventually going to drag the US' standard of living down to the rest of the world's as their's rises towards. You can't get something for nothing. In time the US will suffer. Prepare for China owning more an dmore of teh US debt and consequently the US' economy .

For starts about a third of the people that dies inteh WTC were

Well then why are we in Iraq? UBL was never in Iraq nor were any of his training bases. I will admit that he may have had recruiting centers in Iraq. UBL is most likely in the Xinjiang province of China.
We had him cornered in Tora Bora and let him get away. So it seems least his intention to go after UBL. Maybe it was tough talk and Fantastic movie. The best that I have seen in several years.

That's true of most of the population - but most of that has been true for decades now.

I was high school class of 1972. In a school of over 2400 boys, with a curriculum that emphasized math and science, we had no more than a half-dozen hams.

Back then ham radio had "competition" (in no particular order) from sports, school activities, music, counterculture events, antiwar protests, CB, TV, radio, music, cars and girls. Also family chores, schoolwork and after-school jobs.

We didn't have cell phones or the internet but we had the telephone and we could get around pretty well, with or without cars.

In those days the #1 technical hobby for teenage boys was working on cars. For less than the price of most ham rigs, you could buy a $100 used car and fix it up well enough to get around. Some lucky rich kids got 10-year-old hand-me-down cars from the parental units, which they then worked on to keep on the road. Cars were simpler then, and a mechanically-minded kid knew all about how they worked long before driving age.

So "competition" for kids' time is nothing new.

The most-often-asked questions about ham radio, then and now, are:

"Who do you talk to?"
"What do you talk about?" and
"Why go to all that trouble to talk to strangers?"

Most people back then "didn't get it". A few did. Same as today.

IMHO the prime time to attract kids to ham radio is middle school or earlier.

Most of this spam just gets dumped here like so much garbage out the window. It has no life unless we breathe life into it. The unfortunate thing about crossposting in this context is that there are lots of people seeing the message and some of them will feel compelled to respond.

Richard is right. The only thing you can do to help is to ignore it.

If all they are interested in is the GHz frequencies and up, they never need to bother with code for the license. The codeless Technician license gives them full privileges, full power levels, and all modes for all frequencies above 30 MHz.

Hello, James

I don't know how much of the world will see huge inflation, but I will guarantee we, in the United States, will see it if the huge deficits aren't corrected.

Taxes are going to have to rise (actually, at the local level they are - sales tax, fees, etc.). Ever notice the "FCC fee" on your telephone bill? Eventually, they are going to have to tap the wealthy (including the capital gains), but if they wait too long, it will be too late. My guess is that if the Republicans loose some elections, the Democrats will raise taxes (which should have already been done, considering the deficit). Then, the Republicans will have new ammunition for the next elections.

Regardless, the Federal deficit, in my mind, is the most dangerous thing for the United States at this point in mind (closely followed by the current administration).

I would agree...the days of hamfests are coming to a close.

I was a faithful attendee of Dayton until 1999....since then I have NO urge to go since Ebay serves my needs well.

This last summer I went to our local hamfest after not going for ten years...it confirmed that I had not missed anything by not going.

I seriously doubt that the Dayton Hamvention will last another ten years.

I also suspect we will begin seeing manufacturers going the same route as the hobby continues to die out.

Glad you enjoyed it too. If you read between the lines you'll see how the events back then, and the movie, are a reflection of what is happening now in the middle east. They say those who don't know history are doomed to repeat it. I though the on-screen comment at the end of the movie was like the explanation point at the end of a sentence.

Hate to disappoint you, but "Jews" in general don't believe in "CHRIST". Not those who are stern about their beliefs. They know of him, but they don't believe "he" is the messiah. So, therefore, this poster can't be jewish. Check into the religions, you'll see..... It is common knowledge.

You are absolutely correct, they only hold beliefs in the old testaments books--you know the "eye for an eye" bit... which the muslims also hold as part of their holy books... only Jesus was a kind and forgiving man... makes me move away from muslims and Jews...

Along with everyone else. The reality is that no one gets exactly what THEY want. We settle for elected officials who share our basic ideology, values, and character.

>I don't elect them to go >off and do as they see fit.

But that's exactly what they do, within reason. When was the last time someone you helped to elect did exactly what you wanted them to do?
When was the last time they asked you what you wanted?

Actually Hitler gained his power after Paul Von Hindenburg died in 1934. Before that Hitler was just a chancellor and had been unable to beat Hindenburg in the last election. So in many ways, fate was responsible for Hilter's chance at power.

>Then he convinced the Congress and the >poeple of Gernamy that it was in the best interest that he and the

Yes, and like Clinton, Hitler took the credit for many of the economic improvements that had been occurring, and he was somewhat successful in convincing the less educated into believing that the root of their problems rested squarely on the shoulders of the Jews. Hitler used this as a rallying cry to unify the people into following his distorted views of how things should be.

>He asked for their trust in the >leaderships work and not to worry that they had their best interest

No, he basically told them that Germans were superior, gave them someone else to blame (deflection) for their problems, and promised to "fix" it. When you tell people what they want to hear, it's not hard to gain their support.

>The rate Congres s here is going in ten yrs we all will have to have Surely you have to realize just how exaggeratedly absurd that is. Besides, we already have "papers". It's called a driver's license.

> Members in Congress want even more >rigid Patriot Act enactment. I love that, they want the masses to give >up civl liberties and make them feel it is patriotic to do so! Even >call the law the "Patriot Act".

Well, here's the deal. If we have total freedom and civil liberties, it becomes next to impossible to effectively protect us against outside infiltrators. So you have to make a choice. Either certain freedoms need to be modified or curtailed in order to make our borders more secure, make living and travel throughout our country more difficult for non-citizens, and obtaining forged documents by hostiles much tougher, or we have to learn to accept that the price of our open freedom might likely be a large scale terrorist attack.

You cannot realistically expect to have both total freedom and total protection. If you do not want the government taking steps to protect us from terrorists, then you have no right to complain when they attack. As long as they use our own laws against us, we remain vulnerable.

Most people are willing to give up some freedoms in order to gain better security. But that does not mean that we are "becoming a fascist state". As long as we can continue to elect our representatives, that will not happen. GW Bush will not be the president 4 years from now, and there will be a new leader for us to blame for all the trouble we're having.

>IF Americans don't wake up to the big picture it will be to late. In >fact so many things are no win place that it may now be to late. One

I'd rather lose some civil liberties than worry that my family could be wiped from the planet in one fell swoop. Besides, some people take advantage of certain civil liberties in order to engage in activities that are either illegal or immoral. A greater individual accountability for those activities would not be a bad thing IMHO.

Yea I know, our government has pledged it's true allegiance to the "corporate machine", the free masons, Skull and bones, a "shadow government" consisting of the descendants of Howard Hughes and the "Old money" cronies of the industrial age and maybe even gray aliens from Zeti-Reticuli.

You complain about the motives of our elected officials, yet insist that our form of government is the only way to go. That seems to be an inconsistent position to take. If you don't like your elected officials, then vote them out next term. But don't complain if the majority of voters differ from your opinion and override your selection. That's what majority rule is all about. For every one who gets what they want, someone else will be unhappy. That's life.

Why would I sing a different tune? The reality is the same whether I'm directly affected by it or not. I never said it was a good thing for American workers, but it is an understandable trend considering the economic dynamics of the world market.

>will rise like a Proton Rocket.

So, here we have a double edged sword. We live in a world economy, with companies from all over the world competing for market share. So, what's a U.S. based corporation to do? Should it:

A. Keep its U.S. work force in order to altruistically keep the American work force employed?

B. Outsource to a foreign country where labor and overhead is much cheaper?

Considering that other countries have no objection to using cheap foreign labor, and producing products cheaper, the U.S. company is now at a competitive disadvantage with those products which they are in direct competition from foreign companies.

Tell me, would you pay 50 - 100% more for a TV or some other product just to keep the U.S. company here? Considering that the government is squeezing more and more money out of us in the form of taxes, and the costs of things like fuel are skyrocketing, we look for the best bargains in everything we buy.

And that doesn't cover the foreign market. Would a European pay more for a U.S. made product over a foreign made product?

What ultimately happens to a U.S. corporation who loses a competitive edge?

>What happens when there are no more cheap labor countries like China?
>Can you spell double digit inflation??? How about 20% per yr for about >ten yrs. Maybe even longer or higher inflation rates.

Yes, inflation is a very real fear. But when the standard of living equalizes, then there will be no further incentive to manufacture overseas. Then factors such as shipping costs will make domestic manufacturing attractive again for the U.S. market. Inflation may also be mitigated by market pressures. If people cannot afford to buy as much, demand goes down. When demand goes down, so does the price. That's free market 101.

>Yes as the world's standard of living increases, so will inflation. I >forsee 10 to 20% annual inflation rates somewhere in the 2030 to 2040
>time frame. By then the world will dream of 4% inflation rates.

>Out sourcing is eventually going to drag the US' standard of living >down to the rest of the world's as their's rises towards.

That's what I meant when I said equalize the world's standard of living. Not only will the 3rd world catch up, but we will fall somewhat. That is the price we pay for living in a world market. 50 years ago, when most of our goods were made here, we controlled the market. Now we're just one of many players.

> You can't get something for nothing.

You don't know just how much truth there is in that statement.

> In time the US will suffer. Prepare for Ok, We pretty much agree that the road ahead will be a bit bumpy. So what do we do about it? Can we do anything about it?

Which is meaningless, as new evidence is always being obtained. There has been no definitive decision made with regard to man's affect on

What you think is irrelevant. Anyone else would clearly see that my

He also tried to counter that the law in my state is that in most cases, the cops have to give you at least 5 MPH tolerance before citing you. When I provided the exact statute that spelled this out, his argument then became that "a cop can write anything he wants", which, when placed against the context of his prowess at fighting tickets, should have clued him in to the fruitless nature of writing a ticket that would immediately get kicked out when someone slaps a copy of pa statute 3368 into evidence.

Or, save yourself the download and hassle, and just do it via your "favorites" menu, if you are using Internet Explorer...

- Add the site to your favorites, choose to "make this page available offline".
- Choose how many pages deep you want it to go, and even choose how much HD space you want to limit it to, should you want to limit it.
- Select exactly what you want it to download, images, sound and video, ActiveX and Java applets, and select if you want it to only follow links to HTML pages, or to everything...

Much less hassle...

People like you like to employ the ostrich syndrome and hope others follow suit. You can deny deny deny, but just because you weren't aware of any attacks on US soil after 911 doesn't mean they did not occur. Bush not failed to prevent these attacks with the raping of our civil liberties, he can't even find the culprits. Hell, he swore up and down on national telivision that BL was his number one priority and he would not rest until he was captured...well, somewhere along the line Bush decided (all by himself) that BL was no longer the priority. In fact, we know BL was responsible for 911, but for some really odd reason, he is no longer THE priority, Bush lied...again, and only to get what he really wanted..Hussein,,,and that was for trying to kill his daddy. Now that Powell's words are coming true to Bush (you will OWN Iraq and their people, and all their problems for years to come), Bush is like a fish out of water....and its people like you that are gasping for air.

Hello, John

Are you suggesting just giving away the license? Heck, I learned grade 1.5 Braille in under two weeks (and I can see). I decided I wanted to as a friend is blind and he provided me a Braille slate (that was many decades ago). It was not a big deal; in fact my friend then got on my case asking if I could learn Braille in two weeks, what was the big deal with the code. The reality was that I was lazy. One week later, I was copying 18 words per minute. A few years later, I put 40 words per minute, perfect copy, on paper. It is all a matter of what you want.

As to the cell phone, heck - I can talk to someone anywhere anytime using a land-line telephone. Or my HT (yes, even Australia, thanks to the 10 meter repeater). Of course, amateur radio is not designed to replace the telephone.

I just had some good information from someone via the Internet on fixing a big Hammond X-66 from the 60s. I've repaired a lot of 'em, but this one had me bugged. The guy is in Mexico. The telephone would be of no use as I had to locate someone who knew something about it.

When folks start arguing against amateur radio, they usually bring up a subject that amateur radio is not ideally designed for. Heck, do you want to build a house using only a saw? Perhaps only a hammer? No, you choose the tools you need at the time you need them. In the case of getting help with the Hammond (gawd, I hated the thought of pouring paint thinner down into the scanner - but it worked!), how are you going to locate someone knowledgeable in the subject? Organ repair? No, the organ service guy in this area has referred a few folks with old Hammonds to me. I've always been able to fix 'em even if he can't. But this time I was stuck. Calling the organ repair guy would have yielded no help as I have more knowledge than he. I did call organ repair service in Chicago as that is all that is left of the original Hammond company (it was sold to Ford and then Suzuki) as the new owners didn't want to handle the old stuff. They didn't know, so the telephone was no longer of any use.

Despite the failure of the telephone, I would not suggest that the telephone has no use.

Amateur radio has far to many facets to try and pinpoint exactly what it is. As far as someone not wanting the code, fine. It will go away, but when is unknown. Had I waited for a codeless tech license, I would have delayed 30 some years waiting for a ticket that didn't require cw.

Hello, Dave

I mispoke. I meant the number of marriages that end up in divorce. Most divorced couples remarry. The "approaching 50%" is the number of first marriages that end up in divorce. Usually, one of the couple already has an intended and only needs the divorce to immediately remarry. By the end of a year or two, both are counted as married, although no longer to each other.

As to the dollar, I agree we have had deficits before; but this thing is huge. I also suspect that they want to change Social Security (and it will have to be changed) to an extent that they don't have to pay back all of those IOUs.

No they are not. Since CO2 can come from a variety of places including volcanos, and large forest fires any of which can skew those results.
When the apparent variation in the sun's energy output is taken into consideration, it becomes very difficult to determine the exact rate of global warming and how much of it is part of the cyclic climatic change and how much of it is caused strictly as a result of human activity.

That statement makes absolutely no logical sense. Where is the logic that supports your claim that a foreign news service bias is in any way connected to domestic news services?

Of course your statement, however ignorant and illogical, still did not address my claim which was that foreign news services are just as likely to be politically swayed as any in this country. They are not immune to agenda driven slant. But the exact degree of bias relative to domestic services is irrelevant. You care to deny that? I suppose Several? Hardly. Other than you Twisty and sometimes Landshark (Who's mostly annoyed at the continuing banter), who else has disagreed with my advice on CB radio? If you want to talk about politics, there are too few facts to make any definitive choice as to who is "right" or "wrong".

>Nobody (except one of your sock puppets) has posted -any- opinion that I have had many supporting opinions. Heck, in rec.boats, the conservatives are pretty much even with the liberals. The conservatives mount far better logical arguments. The liberals there tend to limit their opinions to blindly regurgitating talking points and cut and paste articles written by other people. So much for independent thought.

And I have no sock puppets, your attempt to bolster your own sagging credibility by trying to discredit mine notwithstanding. You are becoming as paranoid and narcissistic as Twisty.

Twathed, you forgot these "eminent" politicians' words....dummy!

"One way or the other, we are determined to deny Iraq the capacity to develop weapons of mass destruction and the missiles to deliver them. That is our bottom line."
- President Clinton, Feb. 4, 1998

"If Saddam rejects peace and we have to use force, our purpose is clear. We want to seriously diminish the threat posed by Iraq's weapons of mass destruction program."
- President Clinton, Feb. 17, 1998

"Iraq is a long way from [the USA], but what happens there matters a great deal here. For the risks that the leaders of a rogue state will use nuclear, chemical or biological weapons against us or our allies is the greatest security threat we face."
- Madeline Albright, Feb 18, 1998

"He will use those weapons of mass destruction again, as he has ten times since 1983."
- Sandy Berger, Clinton National Security Adviser, Feb, 18, 1998

"[W]e urge you, after consulting with Congress, and consistent with the U.S.Constitution and laws, to take necessary actions (including, if appropriate, air and missile strikes on suspect Iraqi sites) to respond effectively to the threat posed by Iraq's refusal to end its weapons of mass destruction programs."
- Letter to President Clinton, signed by Sens. Carl Levin,Tom Daschle, John Kerry, and others Oct. 9, 1998

"Saddam Hussein has been engaged in the development of weapons of mass destruction technology which is a threat to countries in the region and he has made a mockery of the weapons inspection process."
- Rep. Nancy Pelosi (D, CA), Dec. 16, 1998

"Hussein has ... chosen to spend his money on building weapons of mass destruction and palaces for his cronies."
- Madeline Albright, Clinton Secretary of State, Nov. 10, 1999

"There is no doubt that ... Saddam Hussein has invigorated his weapons programs. Reports indicate that biological, chemical and nuclear programs continue apace and may be back to pre-Gulf War status. In addition, Saddam continues to redefine delivery systems and is doubtless using the cover of a licit missile program to develop longer-range missiles that will threaten the United States and our allies."
- Letter to President Bush, Signed by Sen. Bob Graham (D, FL,)and others, December 5, 2001

"We begin with the common belief that Saddam Hussein is a tyrant and a threat to the peace and stability of the region. He has ignored the mandated of the United Nations and is building weapons of mass destruction and the means of delivering them."
- Sen. Carl Levin (D, MI), Sept. 19, 2002

"We know that he has stored secret supplies of biological and chemical weapons throughout his country."
- Al Gore, Sept. 23, 2002

"Iraq's search for weapons of mass destruction has proven impossible to deter and we should assume that it will continue for as long as Saddam is in power."
- Al Gore, Sept. 23, 2002

"We have known for many years that Saddam Hussein is seeking and developing weapons of mass destruction."
- Sen. Ted Kennedy (D, MA), Sept. 27, 2002

"The last UN weapons inspectors left Iraq in October of 1998. We are confident that Saddam Hussein retains some stockpiles of chemical and biological weapons, and that he has since embarked on a crash course to build up his chemical and biological warfare capabilities. Intelligence reports indicate that he is seeking nuclear weapons..."
- Sen. Robert Byrd (D, WV), Oct. 3, 2002

"I will be voting to give the President of the United States the authority to use force-- if necessary-- to disarm Saddam Hussein because I believe that the deadly arsenal of weapons of mass destruction in his hands is a real and grave threat to our security."
- Sen. John F. Kerry (D, MA), Oct. 9, 2002

"There is unmistakable evidence that Saddam Hussein is working aggressively to develop nuclear weapons and will likely have nuclear weapons within the next five years ... We also should remember we have always underestimated the progress Saddam has made in development of weapons of mass destruction."
- Sen. Jay Rockefeller (D, WV), Oct 10, 2002

"He has systematically violated, over the course of the past 11 years, every significant UN resolution that has demanded that he disarm and destroy his chemical and biological weapons, and any nuclear capacity. This he has refused to do"
- Henry Waxman (D, CA), Oct. 10, 2002

"In the four years since the inspectors left, intelligence reports show that Saddam Hussein has worked to rebuild his chemical and biological weapons stock, his missile delivery capability, and his nuclear program. He has also given aid, comfort, and sanctuary to terrorists, including al Qaeda members .. It is clear, however, that if left unchecked, Saddam Hussein will continue to increase his capacity to wage biological and chemical warfare, and will keep trying to develop nuclear weapons."

- Sen. Hillary Clinton (D, NY), Oct 10, 2002

"We are in possession of what I think to be compelling evidence that Saddam Hussein has, and has had for a number of years, a developing capacity for the production and storage of weapons of mass destruction."
- Sen. Bob Graham (D, FL), Dec. 8, 2002

"Without question, we need to disarm Saddam Hussein. He is a brutal,murderous dictator, leading an oppressive regime ... He presents a particularly grievous threat because he is so consistently prone to miscalculation ... And now he is miscalculating America's response to his continued deceit and his consistent grasp for weapons of mass destruction ... So the threat of Saddam Hussein with weapons of mass destruction is real ..."
- Sen. John F. Kerry ! (D, MA), Jan. 23. 2003

If one is smart enough to call it an "amateur amplifier" don't they let it be sold? Certainly every cb'er in the world is smart enough to know an amateur linear can be used on 11 meters with very little modification... Also, check out pages on russian linears, they have 3.5KW rigs which are very affordable... a friend going/living in canada can possibly grab one for you easily too... there are many ways around any roadblock they can throw up--retired engineers routinely build linears in their garages for "beer money."

We need a good strong militia here, something on a national level to oversee and watchdog our gov't--and have a basic plan if there ever arises a need to rise up and take control back from our gov't... you would think someone in the right position with enough money would already have something started, anyone know of a good group... nothing radical, just a group which swears to uphold the constitution, but will resort to force if necessary?

Yes, I very much think groups in Iraq and Saudi Arabia financed terrorism--in the case of the Saudis'--still do--and it "overlooked" by those in control there... if and when we find them as long as someone assures they end up dead I will be quite happy...
If they simply wish to retain different views and are peaceful--leave 'em alone...

Bush tossed the gauntlet in the wrong country..meanwhile, the real culprits responsile for 911, like BL, are laughing their collective asses off at American's like you who believe the chicanery of Bush and think 911 had anything to do with Iraq.

People like you like to employ the ostrich syndrome and hope others follow suit. You can deny deny deny, but just because you weren't aware of any attacks on US soil after 911 doesn't mean they did not occur. Bush not failed to prevent these attacks with the raping of our civil liberties, he can't even find the culprits. Hell, he swore up and down on national telivision that BL was his number one priority and he would not rest until he was captured...well, somewhere along the line Bush decided (all by himself) that BL was no longer the priority. In fact, we know BL was responsible for 911, but for some really odd reason, he is no longer THE priority, Bush lied...again, and only to get what he really wanted..Hussein,,,and that was for trying to kill his daddy. Now that Powell's words are coming true to Bush (you will OWN Iraq and their people, and all their problems for years to come), Bush is like a fish out of water....and its people like you that are gasping for air.

Well, I agree, we need a militia to protect ourselves from such as bush and kerry--do you think the power and money is going to allow anyone into office who is for the common citizen--hell no, graft, corruption and bribes rule this gov't--I think that is quite obvious... they play us for fools--this is not a "two party" system--that is all a farce, little has changed from when clinton signed NAFTA and sold missle secrets to the chinese for bribes...

We are in deep chit here!

Yesterday's poll showed 61% of the American people now believe Bush does NOT have the best interests of the country at heart..but I find solace in those stats. People need a wakeup a call in addition to the government they deserve.

Who cares about the RATE? The total amount of divorced people, according to the chart is 9.6% as of 2003. You can break the numbers down by age, race, gender, and income, but the total combined results are 9.6%

It's not the divorce rate, it is the percentage of the population that is divorced. If you would read the spreadsheet, you'd see that.

Ah, well that's a different kettle of fish. Some people marry several times. Others stay married for 50 years or more. Some never marry.

Depending on the agenda of the site, you can find numbers to support the notion that the institution of marriage is in the crapper, or that it is making a dramatic comeback. Take what you read with a grain of salt.

I would certainly feel more secure if my "SS" money was in my own

Ok then. If you admit that Stony Creek is not my current address, and you still claim that the address on my Amateur license is not the correct one, then that leaves only one other possibility, and that is that there is yet another address that I am supposedly living at. Ok, you have my permission to post this elusive address that is supposed to be my primary address. Heck, maybe someone left me some property that I don't know about.

More likely though you probably stumbled across the address of another David Hall (My phone book has at least a whole page full of them), and crossed it with mine. His wife is probably the Kimberly T. Hall who you insist is my wife and is a teacher (My wife is/was actually an

Not when one considers that the antenna was for a repeater, and the comment was made 4 or 5 years prior.

I never personally had a Stationmaster on my house. But I do have part ownership of a 220 Mhz repeater, which makes the antenna technically part "mine".

In most cases. I do not argue absolutes. It's too easy to prove wrong.
All it takes is one example.

>...shark proved you wrong with one >post and a single example of an exception proving you wrong.

Shark does not live in PA so he cannot "prove" me wrong in matters not endemic to Pa. The law in PA, as of statute 3368, explicitly calls for those tolerance speeds. A cop will not give a ticket , in most cases, for any speed less than 5 MPH over the posted limit, as it is sure to get thrown out.

You can play your word games, and Frank can dig up his stopwatch, but the law is there in black and white, and it was actually fun watching you guys, in your desperation to prove me wrong, argue against the written law, and trying to find the smallest exceptions in order to invalidate the law in the vast majority of cases.

You mean Frank was right when he called you Dave McCampbell?

It's far easier when you're up front about who you are from the beginning. I could have just as easily invented a cartoon character, hid behind it, and kept totally anonymous. But I have nothing to hide.

The funniest part is that when you reveal truthful information about me, I don't deny it, since I don't care. But when you lie (or are misinformed), it makes me laugh to see you defend your methods so vehemently. If and when you finally get the name of my wife correct, I'll admit it. Like I said, I have nothing to hide.

Keep digging.

understand properly. You are a hopeless idealist. Reality is a concept that escapes you. You don't even understand that the establishment clause does not establish separation of church and state. Nowhere are the words separation of church and state in there.

I am saying, it really doesn't matter, it is too late, possibly if the exams were made twice as difficult so the intellectuals felt challenged and the code was dropped--perhaps it would appeal to more... however, I think there is little chance of any changes which will save it, ancient old men keep reciting the same mantras, are in denial that the methods they think will work, WON'T and keep trying to find answers reading tea leaves...

... truth is, there is not a large enough group of people in their teens and twentys to breath life into it... and I don't see anyway of getting them in... other than what I have already suggested... we need some of the brightest minds comming from college right now--I teach a course at a Jr. college... I have found the WILL NOT bother with the code... they would have no problem passing an exam ten times as tough... I have seen this in action...

A lot of people worry about their kids cell phone use and would like to limit it... I say put a code exam on the damn thing... problem would be cured overnight!

Well, they would probably just switch to IRC and instant messaging--if they are not already there--so put a damn code exam on those too!!! <grin>

Warmest regards,
John

First we would have to vote on who they are allowed to run, I don't see anyone there right now I would vote for, not hillary, not kerry, not even the congressman or senator who is "mine", it feels like someone else put him in office (in deed the largest developer here donates to his campaign and my elected official are bending over for him constantly--and the issues are somehow ever blocked from getting onto the ballot to be reversed)--he has done nothing for me... hope he has helped someone somewhere... what has your congressman done for you?

Tariffs are an overly naive and simplistic answer, which will not help. I'll tell you why. First off, the import tariff will raise the price of imported goods which drive up the costs that the American consumer pays. Then the worker will demand more in raises to compensate, and you now have inflation. Secondly, the U.S. is but ONE consumer of goods. American companies trying to compete in foreign markets will not have the protection of the tariff and they will wither under strong foreign competition which they will not be able to match. Also, other countries do not like tariff policies and would likely impose tariffs on our goods in retaliation to our tariffs on theirs. Surely you can figure out what would happen then.

So, then, you would rather an American company keep it's American workforce in a patriotic corporate suicide attempt, as it folds under unmatchable competition from abroad? What if all US companies fold or move their corporate headquarters offshore? Then what?

Well that's true to an extent. Those who invest their money in fixed rate securities (retired people) will earn more interest, while those seeking to borrow, will pay more. But the rich are who generally create the jobs that the rest of us work at. If inflation cuts into their costs too much, they will have to reduce the workforce or make other cuts (outsource?) to keep the margins.

Here is a guy which can help you out, or you can at least get ideas from his page...

A good 4KW to 5KW russian tube in a homebrew linear is just the ticket, especially if you just "idle" the tube at a 3.5 KW input... last you a lifetime and all the power you will ever need... someone should set up a home business building them...

If it doesn't cover at least 25-30 Mhz (2-50 Mhz is preferable) it isn't of any use to me! And, it isn't any problem to change most any linear to cover those freqs.

If you end up with a piece of equip which doesn't cover those freqs any college kid with an electronics major can do the mod for you, if you can find no one else...(sometimes as simple as just cutting a filter out of the circuit, input/output or both)

If all else fails, send me a scanned copy of the schematic diagram and I will pencil in the necessary changes for you... scan it, and send the changes back to you...

There are two kinds of people in this world:
1) Those with reasons why they can't.
2) Those who just go ahead and do it!

John

Wrong. Volcanos give off very little CO2 -- most of the gasses are Hydrogen Sulfide and oxides of Sulfer. And the Carbon Dioxide from forest fires is easily calculated. In fact, forest fires (both recent and ancient) are studied for their impact on the environment and have been found to cause very little variation in CO2 concentration simply because they occur every year, and are actually -decreasing- in both frequency and intensity.

Wrong. Solar variations can be determined from tree ring growth, and when compared to ice samples they can be differentiated from CO2 concentrations.

Absolutely. Any news service is subject to bias simply because must decide if any given article is newsworthy. US news services are biased because of corporate ownership influences and target audience demographics. IOW, the Dutch are far less concerned with American news than Americans, so an independent Dutch news agency is going to have far less bias than any US news service, NPR included.

Yanno, I was wondering what goofball would hamper perfectly good engineers with throwing throttles on perfectly working equipment--I should have known it was some gov't bureaucracy!!! I guess those kind of idiots are plentiful since reagan closed down the mental wards in California!

It won't die out unless prospective hams choose to believe false statements like "... as the hobby continues to die out". You are attempting to create a self fulfilling prophecy. There are bound to be fluctuations both up and down over the years but at over 600,000 licensed hams we are not yet in any danger of dying out unless people believe unsupported statements like yours.

Wrong. The majority of -voters- choose. And the person they choose is not the "winner", as if being a public official was some sort of prize. It's not. It's a job. And their job is to work in the best interests of -ALL- their constituents, not just those that voted them into office.

And just for your information, your right to vote is granted by the state, not guaranteed by the Constitution. There have been many efforts to add a Constitutional amendment that would guarantee every citizen the right to vote, but each attempt has been blocked by the Republicans. That's just another tidbit you never hear about from the "left-wing liberally biased news media".

You can blame Bush's Patriot Act for that one.

Of course rights have some limitations because there are circumstances where exercising those rights can infringe on the rights of others. How does gay marriage infringe on -your- rights, Dave?

The lack of a driver's license doesn't prevent you from travelling freely, just not with a motor vehicle. Regardless, you can drive a motor vehicle without a license if you are on private property. Excellent. Now learn something about it. For starters, try "The Constitution of the United States: Its Sources and its Application" by Thomas James Norton. This book should be kept on your desk right next to your barely-used dictionary and over-worked computer.

That is all fine and dandy, and a scope goat for the why "hams are NOT dying" mantra... what group(so) are a smaller minority than the hams, and why should anyone (even the FCC) bother with such a small group--when--it can be combined with other users and managed much more intelligently, fairly and cheaply... hams are just not that special--this is all ancient technology they have and deal with, the future needs to combine young engineers and scientists into communications so everyone ends up with a better use of the radio spectrum...

The younger hams should set the course, they will inherit what they build... within one decade many of those holding ham tickets will be gone, in two decades the numbers are LARGE, in three decades those numbers are FRIGHTENING!!!!

Those under 40 would best pilot this ship...

Wrong. Import tariffs drive up the cost of -imported- products, which in turn encourages -domestic- production and manufacturing. The prices will go up, as will the wages; but the overall effect is that the domestic economy is stimulated, which more than compensates for any short-term dips. And for the record, it also reduces the amount paid for welfare since more people are working.

Wrong on both counts. American innovation and technology is, and has always been, one of the primary exports of this country. Stimulate the industrial base and you stimulate people and businesses to be more innovative (instead of using the word as an advertising gimmick).

Wrong. The failure of Reaganomics proved that people create their own jobs when the rich get too greedy. They do so out of necessity.

It really doesn't matter since the US is no longer a free-market economy -- the Federal Reserve has tight (and probably illegal) control over the money supply and keeps the inflation rate down artificially.

But Iraq's natural resources are only partially owned and controlled by Iraq. They were fully owned by Iraq under Saddam, but after his overthrow many international conglomerates (mostly US and UK oil companies, most of which include the Bush family as stockholders) invoked claims that existed prior to Saddam. The people of Iraq are going to see hardly any of the money that comes from their own resources -- instead it's going right into the pockets of oil company fat-cats.

Do you know of a source for reliable data on ham licenses that drills down below the often quoted total licenses outstanding. Are there any studies that estimate the number of active licenses and ages of the holders and how those numbers have trended over time.

They didn't throttle anything except making it a bit harder for your average illegal CB dork to tear up his neighbors stuff. Not that it matters much, since the illegals still can get amps. By the way, that rule was made in 1978, when the peanut man ran the show.

Your DIMocrats said much of this stuff LONG before Bush was the President, and more afterwards...so here is the black and white proof you are full of it. Your Goebbelian methods are exposed for the cut and paste fraud they are. I would put a gag on my azz if I was you, you talk out of it way too much, fool.

"One way or the other, we are determined to deny Iraq the capacity to develop weapons of mass destruction and the missiles to deliver them. That is our bottom line."
- President Clinton, Feb. 4, 1998

"If Saddam rejects peace and we have to use force, our purpose is clear. We want to seriously diminish the threat posed by Iraq's weapons of mass destruction program."

- President Clinton, Feb. 17, 1998

"Iraq is a long way from [the USA], but what happens there matters a great deal here. For the risks that the leaders of a rogue state will use nuclear, chemical or biological weapons against us or our allies is the greatest security threat we face."

- Madeline Albright, Feb 18, 1998

"He will use those weapons of mass destruction again, as he has ten times since 1983."
- Sandy Berger, Clinton National Security Adviser, Feb, 18, 1998

"[W]e urge you, after consulting with Congress, and consistent with the U.S.Constitution and laws, to take necessary actions (including, if appropriate, air and missile strikes on suspect Iraqi sites) to respond effectively to the threat posed by Iraq's refusal to end its weapons of mass destruction programs."

- Letter to President Clinton, signed by Sens. Carl Levin,Tom Daschle, John Kerry, and others Oct. 9, 1998

"Saddam Hussein has been engaged in the development of weapons of mass destruction technology which is a threat to countries in the region and he has made a mockery of the weapons inspection process."

- Rep. Nancy Pelosi (D, CA), Dec. 16, 1998

"Hussein has ... chosen to spend his money on building weapons of mass destruction and palaces for his cronies."
- Madeline Albright, Clinton Secretary of State, Nov. 10, 1999

"There is no doubt that ... Saddam Hussein has invigorated his weapons programs. Reports indicate that biological, chemical and nuclear programs continue apace and may be back to pre-Gulf War status. In addition, Saddam continues to redefine delivery systems and is doubtless using the cover of a licit missile program to develop longer-range missiles that will threaten the United States and our allies."
- Letter to President Bush, Signed by Sen. Bob Graham (D, FL,)and others, December 5, 2001

"We begin with the common belief that Saddam Hussein is a tyrant and a threat to the peace and stability of the region. He has ignored the mandated of the United Nations and is building weapons of mass destruction and the means of delivering them."
- Sen. Carl Levin (D, MI), Sept. 19, 2002

"We know that he has stored secret supplies of biological and chemical weapons throughout his country."
- Al Gore, Sept. 23, 2002

"Iraq's search for weapons of mass destruction has proven impossible to deter and we should assume that it will continue for as long as Saddam is in power."

- Al Gore, Sept. 23, 2002

"We have known for many years that Saddam Hussein is seeking and developing weapons of mass destruction."
- Sen. Ted Kennedy (D, MA), Sept. 27, 2002

"The last UN weapons inspectors left Iraq in October of 1998. We are confident that Saddam Hussein retains some stockpiles of chemical and biological weapons, and that he has since embarked on a crash course to build up his chemical and biological warfare capabilities. Intelligence reports indicate that he is seeking nuclear weapons..."

- Sen. Robert Byrd (D, WV), Oct. 3, 2002

"I will be voting to give the President of the United States the authority to use force-- if necessary-- to disarm Saddam Hussein because I believe that the deadly arsenal of weapons of mass destruction in his hands is a real and grave threat to our security."
- Sen. John F. Kerry (D, MA), Oct. 9, 2002

"There is unmistakable evidence that Saddam Hussein is working aggressively to develop nuclear weapons and will likely have nuclear weapons within the next five years ... We also should remember we have always underestimated the progress Saddam has made in development of weapons of mass destruction."
- Sen. Jay Rockefeller (D, WV), Oct 10, 2002

"He has systematically violated, over the course of the past 11 years, every significant UN resolution that has demanded that he disarm and destroy his chemical and biological weapons, and any nuclear capacity.

This he has refused to do"
- Henry Waxman (D, CA), Oct. 10, 2002

"In the four years since the inspectors left, intelligence reports show that Saddam Hussein has worked to rebuild his chemical and biological weapons stock, his missile delivery capability, and his nuclear program. He has also given aid, comfort, and sanctuary to terrorists, including al Qaeda members .. It is clear, however, that if left unchecked, Saddam Hussein will continue to increase his capacity to wage biological and chemical warfare, and will keep trying to develop nuclear weapons."

- Sen. Hillary Clinton (D, NY), Oct 10, 2002

"We are in possession of what I think to be compelling evidence that Saddam Hussein has, and has had for a number of years, a developing capacity for the production and storage of weapons of mass destruction."
- Sen. Bob Graham (D, FL), Dec. 8, 2002

"Without question, we need to disarm Saddam Hussein. He is a brutal,murderous dictator, leading an oppressive regime ... He presents a particularly grievous threat because he is so consistently prone to miscalculation ... And now he is miscalculating America's response to his continued deceit and his consistent grasp for weapons of mass destruction ... So the threat of Saddam Hussein with weapons of mass destruction is real ..."

that is an interesting question, I think statistics became so bad in 1999 to

First I never stated that our system was the only way to go. While it has its problems, the good of our system overrides the bad. What I have stated is that if the citizens do not stand in vigilance of their elected officials this government will degrade into Facism or a dictatorship.

Second since I vote, I have the right to complain whether you like it or not.

Third if I don't like what the elected officials are doing I DO VOTE against them.

Fourth we have a Constitution to protect the Rights of the Minority and not the Rights of the Majority. The Majority never needs protection.

Fifth I don't ask that everything that I want to be enacted. I do waccept the rule of the majority. I do expect the majority to hear the voice of the minority and compromise.

I am not a conspiracy nut. All you have to do is follow the money trail and it becomes as obvious as the nose on your face that Congress has been influienced by "money" Senators and Congressmen don't need warchests of millions of dollars but for one thing, to get relected.
Who contributes to these warchests? Mostly Corporate America and Foreign Global Companies.

Look at the legislation passed. Who does it favor? Why does Bush and key republicans want to weaken EPA laws? To help companies that emmit pollutants. Why? Because the costs to add additional equiptment to meet the standards impact profits. Lower profits means that either companies relocate outside the US or pass on the increased costs to consumers. Yes companies use blackmail to get legislation in their favor. They don't always get what they want and at times they get none of what they want. But if y ou think that Corporate America does not have any influence on Congress then I suggest that you come out of Wonderland and quit chasing rabbits.

Actually a majority of the voters that vote. In reality, there has not been a president elected in the past 50yrs with a majority of eligable voters. The 1996 election had only 49.6% of voting age population turnout to vote. IN 2000 it was 50.1%. In 1960 over 65% of Voting age Population voted. Voter turnouts of all voting age population in national elections have dropped steadily since 1964.

Basically GW Bush was elected with about 30% of all voting age population in this country.

If you want to research more try www.fec.gov. That is the Federal Elections Commision.

Hello it is not tough cookies. The preisident does not have carte blanche to just crush those that did not vote for him into the dirt.

G W Bush is not the president of republicans. He is the president of all political parties. Any president has to realize that he must weigh the needs of all the people of this country and not beholden to his party. That is where the partizen politics have degraded in this country over the past 40 yrs.

Personally I do not like the idea of fighting radicals like the insurgents of Iraq on their home land. Not a good strategy. They will play the game of attritian. They will die to remove us. The only way to fight that kind of fight was lost two years ago. We should have pacified the country and we did not. Now we have to fight a war in which the enemy refuses to show their face.

They are willing to sacrifice bodies to kill us. Each one of them that dies is a hero and a martyr. In reality we can never truly win in Iraq. The best that we now can hope for is a situation where both sides will grow so tired of fighting that they wish to quit. Five years from now Iraq will be an Islamic state very much like Iran.
Irregardless of what we do now. I predict that the democracy that we set up, will not last beyond five yrs.

Unfortunately I don't have much...only rumor and innuendo.

The FCC statistics are interesting and show what appears to be a gradual decline in membership - The total of renewals plus new licenses is less than total expirations. The FCC staff analysis in 2000 was not exactly glowing in it's projection about the future - kind of a gradual decline. It would be interesting to see the data over a longer period of time but I believe FCC changed it's methods around 2000.

What is missing is how much current licenses are used. With that data we could guesstimate expirations. That would take a study that the FCC doesn't have the resources to fund and one the ARRL may not want to know the answer to.

There may be a point in the future where the new loss of members begins to increase but there is no way to forecast that because licenses are good for 10 years and there is no way to project future expirations because we don't have any idea what current license usage is.

Not sure if this is the post I had made or not - that you're replying to, but I too had a RS SSB CB for sale and did advertise it on here - before my last computer died. It is a TRC-449. In reasonable shape considering age.
Seems to work ok. Comes with stock mic. "MAY" need tuned up.

And people under 40 (or under 50, for that matter) aren't going to bother with Morse Code, for the most part.

It will be interesting to see what the license numbers look like in a few years in countries that have eliminated the code requirement. Will the numbers be better there? For that matter, are other countries seeing the same apparent declines that we see in the US?

Top of the morning to ya!!!

Funny you should mention that..... PRIME RIB!!!!
Going to use a soy/honey marinade the night before.
Then I have a rub I make that consists of: Onion powder, cumin (spelling), hickory salt, Salt, Pepper, paprika and a couple of other thrown it for good luck.
Then I'm going to sslllllllooooooowwwwwww cook
it approx 6 to 8 hours on the Q, using apple wood chips.
I've been doing a lot of slow, indirect smoking type cooking as of late, turning out to be the best.
I've got a built-in brick Q, but I added a smoker style top along with a smoker box that drops onto the coal (I use mesquite charcoal), so indirect smoke cooking has been great as of late.

Have a great Holiday! On Saturday I'm taking my son to a train museum. Sunday, go for a ride on the bike over to the Bay Area to a friends house and hangout around his pool drinking beer. Monday, hangout with the family in the backyard, slow cook that Prime Rib and soak in the Hot tub! It just don't get much better ;)

Sounds good, we are going to try and perfect our baby backs this weekend. My wife has her dry rub down pretty good, I just need to settle on a mop sauce. And of course do some beer sampling. :-) Any rate, its going to be a fun weekend rain or not. Supposed to rain all weekend down here.

Have a great Holiday...

Dee,

I am basing my comments on what I see within the hobby.

When I went to Dayton, I was a member of a group of about 30 members who spent significant time and money to go and we did that for many years.

>From that group, now only less than five people go to Dayton and even those only go every couple years.

These are people who do hold licenses but use them less and less if at all. Many have since sold their stations.

Ham radio is in its twilight years and as the old guard dies off which is happening at an ever increasing rate, the slide into obscurity will accelerate.

As has been noted earlier, take a hard look at the demographics of the attendees of the Dayton Hamvention. It is obvious to the most casual observer that the age of the attendees is heavily weighted to the 50-60+ year range. Give them another ten years and the numbers decline further, it is doubtful that they will have the numbers to sustain the costs incurred to host the Hamvention.

I also think that manufacturers are preparing for this decline. The recent cancellation of the Drake R8B indicates that the hobby is not capable of supporting its equipment needs or the development of new product. The drop in the prices in collectibles such as the Collins line is another indicator that money is being spent elsewhere as interest wanes.

Your thoughts?

TMT

Go back your stale beer and drugs wogie, no one is paying any attention to what you have to say. Say, how many times do you use that Restricted Radio Operators Permit you keep bragging about? You know, the one where you don't even take a test, just fill out an FCC form.
What happened to that Second Class ticket you claimed to have? Did the FCC make you retest for that one too and you failed?

3684. JOB WANTED

Subject: JOB WANTED

A man goes into the employment office in Los Angeles, there aren't many jobs so it doesn't take him long. Then, just as he's on his way out, he spots something.
"Wanted," it says, "Single man, willing to travel, must have own scissors. $500 a day guaranteed, plus company car and all expenses."
Well, it sounds a bit too good to be true, but he makes a note and walks up at the counter.
"I'd like to apply for this job," he says, "reference number E/784/B46."
"Oh, that one," says the clerk. "It's a model agency right here in Los Angeles. They're looking for a pubic hair snipper. "You see, they supply girls who model underwear and bathing suits, and before they go on the catwalk, they'd report to you and you have to snip off any wisps of pubic hair that are showing. It pays well, but there are a few drawbacks. It involves quite a lot of travel. The Bahamas, Tahiti, Paris, London... that sort of thing... and you have to get used to expense account living in first-class hotels."
"I reckon I could learn to live with all that," says the fellow. "I'd really like to apply for the job."
The clerk shrugs and says, "OK, here's an application form and a bus ticket to Fresno."
"Fresno? What do I wanna go to Fresno for?"
"Well," says the clerk, "that's where the end of the application line is at the moment!"

a number of collins gear models continue to bring in " staggering " used prices .... this and the interest / prices keep rising on ebay.

to see what I mean go to the " radio: CB, Ham, & Shortwave " category and type in Collins and then look at the prices that the 640 " closed out " items have brought and be stunned !!!!!!!

used drake gear is right there behind collins too ....

some examples of recent collins sales :

In 1976, outside of Ft Lee Army Installation, there were women shopping at the grocery store with bathrobes and bare feet. The grocery store

Cool, Have a great weekend man. I had the Plymouth out for about an hour before it started raining, the old dog/new engine seems strong except I may have to go to electric fans with cowling. It gets up to about 210 while

Yea but that's just a notch too hot for my liking, some of it is due to tbeing a brand new build so it's still a little too tight to let er rip. Once I get 500 or so miles on it the operating temp will drop 10-20 degrees. My problem (i think) is I don't have any cowling around the flex-fan right now, so the cooling air isn't ducted to the block it cools the hood instead.

Summit has a decent electric rig for about $200 with a thermosat that will ease my worries soon. Not enough time in the day right now for me. :)

Have for sale a Cobra 142 GTL with two desk mikes.One is the infamous Silver Eagle which is wired for the radio.The other is a Turner Super Sidekick which is not wired for the radio.It has a three prong plug on it.
I have no idea what the package is worth,so I will take offers on it and will sell it to someone.It is hooked up now at my home and sounds great and I get good reports on my transmits.I have no clue as to if it has been modified or if it is stock.So lets here some offers and not a bunch of Bull---- .

Well there ya go! These folk have run their course in Ham radio and are bored and dropping out. Happens in a lot of hobbies

Any hobby dies out for the person that loses interest.

Making a demographic out of the people at Dayton? Just how many young kids are you expecting to see there?

I don't doubt that the Ham radio population is likely an older one. I also don't doubt that demographics for a lot of hobbies are shifting. It wasn't until my 40s that I started to get enough spare time to even think about a hobby. I tried Amateur astronomy, but the wx in central PA is kinda like Seattle, and I looked into amateur radio. BTW, if you think Ham radio is graying, Amateur astronomy would shock you.

The young ones will come into the hobby. We just have to wait for them to grow up.

Yeah, how many hams do you think ever had a Drake R8B? And of those who do, how many use it as part of their station?

The drop in the prices in collectibles such as the Collins > line is another indicator that money is being spent elsewhere as

Personally I think any price drop in Collins equipment is on account of potential buyers regaining sanity. At Dayton this year, there were a lot of them. Some sold, a fair number didn't. Especially at the one tent where the people were trying to sell them for way over their worth.

Collins is old tube stuff. Fine radios no doubt, but hardly worth the price of a decent new rig.

So many came out this year at Dayton that potential buyers could pretty much call the shots. After all, you can ask for @ kilobucks for an old Collins, but is it worth that much if no one buys it for that much?

It looks like the bottom line is that back in June 1997 there were 678,473 licensed hams and in May of 1995 there were 664,972 licensed hams.
Thats a decrease of 2 percent over 8 years. Its a decline but not by much.

Does anyone have statistics that go back three or four decades??

maybe the value of the radio is in the beholder or it's applications ....

for example , I have a satori / sherwood modded
, full boat, drake r-4c and a fully loaded FT1000 field ....sitting side by side .. here in the shack and the so called " old tube r4-c " blows the doors off my much newer and more expensive FT1000mp v . the FT1000 receiver is an embarrassment as compared to the drake on weak DX in a VERY crowded CW band. no comparison at all. people tell me that many of the collins receivers can be tuned up to outperform even the drake r4-c receivers. maybe THAT is why people pay more for a drake r4-c (I have $1200 to $1400 invested in mine , so far) or collins !! certainly the value is in the weak signal / crowded band performance to me and looks like it is to a LOT of other people too.

obviously , for your operating needs, solid state rigs do the job
.... but for those of us that need competition grade cw receivers
...... some tube receivers are still doing a better job. different strokes for different folks. I've got the best of both worlds and , for me, tubes still do a better job in certain applications. (both my amps < a alpha and a henry > have tubes too) .... I do use my FT1000 for my transmitter / exciter tho .. ha ha ha ha ah.

k.................

Antiquities are only worth what people are willing to pay for them including old tube junk. 10 to 15 years ago an old Chrysler Hot Rod from the 60's or 70's wasn't worth much, now you can't touch one in very good shape for less than 3 to 4 times the original selling price new. Go figure.

What would be of much more interest is the use to which the licenses are put. A history of how the various classes operated over time would provide a big clue as to what is happening to the service now. Hard numbers are better than the constant speculation I see here all the time. For example a decline in some types of operations could reflect a trend where the technology in use is either unpopular or being replaced by another one. For example AM by SSB. This would even answer the ever present question, and assertion, that Ham Radio is being supplemented by increased computer use and the Internet. Knowing that then the ARRL could spend it's time promoting those things that apparently Ham Radio still had the edge in capabilities. If you want increased license numbers then you have to know how to "market" Ham Radio, and if you don't know what the market wants, or you promote the wrong thing, then you end up with a declining market share, i.e. license numbers.

Here's a 140-watt RF amplifier I built that I'm selling. It works great and it's very rugged. I'm selling it because I never used it much, I just enjoyed building it. It's like the Abrams tank of amplifiers.

I've been granted an FCC license for a GMRS radio (ZA category), which I use in my business, and found on their website that my call sign is... WQCTxxx. It is a seven character combination or capital letters and digits.

What does it mean and how can I use it? My "radio" is a small handheld walkie-talkie with 4W max power output. Where is the call number in there? Shall I use it when I talk to my counterpart: "Hello, this is WQCTxxx, please, report to me?" Is it all to it? Like a caller ID only in the air?

Is there a set of rules describing the proper use of it?

Thanks

Well that's straight forward enough at first glance. The sticking point is many don't want a Ham ticket for any reason, they don't even know what it is. The ones you need to ask are those who find they get what they want using other means, computer - Internet, AFTER considering Ham Radio. The ideal place to find that information are the classes the ARRL is pushing under their educational program.

This is an important point because the kids can then make an "informed" choice based facts and first hand experience instead of something they read in a magazine or seen on TV / movies. Also just how many of those kids that do get licensed stick with the hobby? For those that don't these are the ones that have the answers as to why, for example the cell phone - instant messaging fits their needs and interest better. I don't know if the ARRL even bothers to try and collect this kind of data.

>I'd almost bet they are telling the truth...

Why wouldn't they?

If you're going to try random chance at least try to narrow down the number of options, improve the odds of success, a bit. That's only going to happen if the ARRL gets systematic about collecting some useful and meaningful data, otherwise known as market research.

Normally I just sandbag on the side in this news group reading the posts. Most of the arguments over licensing numbers are petty much useless since most don't have any hard statistical data to support their points. I have to admit some of the arguments I've read are very well constructed and logical, but without the hard data it's just all speculation.

It is the 4-letter 3-digit sequence assigned to you by the FCC. This is listed in the box labeled "Call Sign" on the middle left side of the "Radio Station Authorization" form you got from the FCC in the mail.

> Shall I use it when I talk to my counterpart: "Hello, this is WQCTxxx, > please, report to me?" Is it all to it? Like a caller ID only in the air?

95.119 Station identification.

(a) Except as provided in paragraph (e), every GMRS station must transmit a station identification:

(1) Following the transmission of communications or a series of communications; and

(2) Every 15 minutes during a long transmission.

(b) The station identification is the call sign assigned to the GMRS station or system.

(c) A unit number may be included after the call sign in the identification.

(d) The station identification must be transmitted in:

(1) Voice in the English language; or

(2) International Morse code telegraphy.

(e) A station need not identify its transmissions if it automatically retransmits communications from another station which are properly identified.

The dilemma, if you want to describe it as that, of declining Ham licensees is little to worry about. It appears that some few hand-wringers are making much ado about nothing.

I have noted that, over the years, the majority of new Hams are not joining the ARRL. And for good reason, too.

The ARRL is a dinosaur, replete with septegenarians who are interested in doing things the 'old way'. Many new Hams look at the yearly fee to be a member and simply toss the application in the waste basket. I did this very thing some 25 years ago and never looked back.
After all, who really needs the ARRL? What do you get for your membership? A monthly magazine? Big deal.

I will leave the speculation and 'hard data' gathering processes to others who show an interest in data processing. Their efforts will be of little value in the long term scheme, other than they gathered some numbers and percentages that have little, if any, value in the long run.

Meanwhile, catch me on the HF bands. I'll leave the overcrowded two meter repeaters to the handi-talkie newbies.

All the more reason to upgrade.

In VK, we continue to see a steady decline, both in absolute numbers and in membership of our national radio body (Wireless institute of Australia)
despite the removal of CW as an comulsory entry requirement onto HF.
However, we are about to see a new licence system introduced similar to the UK system (which I believe resulted in an increase in numbers there). Age demographics are pretty much on the "old side" - but there continues tobe a trickle of young amateurs coming on line - how it will go in the end, not sure.
On a side note, the use of HF appears to have increased, but not dramatically and it would be difficult to prove conclusively that this is the case (based mainly on callback numbers to the weekly WIA broadcasts).

Thanks for telling me that but I think I am fine. I am not incorporated. I have one employee. I applied as an individual. I filled out an application on their website at www.wireless.fcc.gov/usl/ and I do not remember if they asked me about my business name. Anyway, I used my office address as I recall. It is too confusing for me to understand in all its entirety since I have too many other things to worry about.

Let me ask you another question. For my counterpart to use their GMRS I have to get a second license (Yes/No)--I guess the answer is yes?

That second license can be had as if it is attached to my existing account which now has the first license on it that is discussed here (Yes/No)?

I don't really need a crowd to join. You, guys, are giving me almost more than I need to orient myself to the wireless world:)

Thanks.

Yes, I am fed up with people harvesting my email address and sending junk.
Until a legislation is enacted to protect Internet users I will remain anonymous.

I just entered your email address gmrsinfo@gmail.com in my safe list of my hotmail account and you can send it to alex_blaivas333@hotmail.com Please, remove "333" before mailing. It is for protection.

I really appreciate your help. Thank you very much.

Happy Memorial weekend everyone.

Sorry.

Need a lot bigger sample size though. The younger people that I know find the code the most fascinating part. The resistance comes from people taking up ham radio who are middle aged. However neither your sample nor mine is large enough to draw conclusions.

Hello Alexb:

I listen in on a bunch on vhf and uhf Frequencies on my scanner. Most GMRS and the commercial channels hardly any one uses call signs, except for a few hams that are using modified UHF radios to talk on the GMRS and FRS channels, they slip up and give their ham call sign, hehehehe

When call signs are used they mostly get it wrong or leave out letters or numbers kind of funny. Or a foreign accent adds to the "What was that they said"

If the general public was held for call sign accuracy we would all be in jail.

So I wouldn't loose any sleep over it.

We had a local vhf channel that at one time had Berts Pizza and a few delivery cars, a cement truck company, a school, and a fire fighting outfit showed on the same channel during a forest fire. No body used call signs, but it was very entertaining. We call it the "E" channel, hehehehehehehhehe

Keep in mind that any change in rules may take years to have a noticeable impact on the number of licensees. How long has VK been codeless? Has it been long enough to have the hoped for impact? If you change licensing systems, the same questions need considered before judging it.

Here in the states, it seems that the last couple of changes in licensing requirements has had no noticeable long term effect.

Sorry for the intrusion with the FS, but I am trying to clear out some stuff, and this is one of the better places to tell folks. This stuff will not be listed here again after this listing. Chances are, it won't go to E-Bay either. Thanks in advance for your patience and reading.

FS

1 - Cobra 139 XLR Base AM-SSB CB, with box, stock mic and I believe - the papers too. Was said to be working ok. Owned by an elderly lady - clearing out. $50.

1 - TRC 449 40 Channel SSB CB - in reasonable condition, seems to be working. $20

1 - Courier Classic PLL 40 - chrome case, has built in AC supply. I don't have an AC cord for it at moment, will "try" to find one - but most any shaver type should work. The set is in decent shape and does or did work when last checked - except for PA, which doesn't seem to be hooked up via any function switch. According to the SAMS manual, they showed the PA not used in all models. This set is "mobile" sized and could make for a good mobile/base radio to take from car to house OR camper. $20.

1 - Realistic CB - Telephone handset type - AM - 40 channel (I believe). It is in my shop - out of sight as of this writing. It does or did work when last checked. $25

1 - Turner mobile power mic. Needs battery. It worked when pulled from service. No way to test now. $20.

2 - Astatic Lollipop style mics. In good physical shape. Was said to be working ok. Came from the elderly lady's house as mentioned above. $45 each.

1 - Cobra Power Mic - Never used on any radio, but the connector was changed for someone who was "supposed" to buy it and didn't. The original 5 pin connector will be on it or included for application. $18.

(?) quantity of Cobra stock mics - 4 and 5 pin. Appearing in good condition. $7.50 each.

(?) quantity of Realistic stock mics - din plugs or whatever may be on them - $7.50 each.

(?) quantity of 2 Way Radio mics. Can be used for CB or Ham if desired. All are pulls from service. $2.50 each.

Other CBs available also.. No other SSB units available. Prices are $15 or so depending on model, etc. Have also components (new in package), tubes, batteries, some antennas for CB/Ham and 2 way radio. Coax, Hardline, etc.

I can bench test the CBs for basic operation before shipping, mics I can give a quick look at. I am not going to hook them up to sets to try them. ALL items are sold AS IS - USED OR NOS unless the item is bought "new" - such as the Batteries, antennas, coax, hardline, etc. Those will come with manufacturer's warranty. Any questions as to new/used/warranty or as is, ask "before" buying. Shipping is NOT included. Payments are via Pay Pal or Postal MO only.

Also have some surplus parts. Have some old weird stuff too. If looking for anything, ask.... I may have it. I do NOT have any HAM equipment such as radios - at the moment. I do buy outs of business and Hams/CBers, never know what I may end up with from time to time. Keep me in mind for future needs if none immediately.

E-mail me at CLFURENT@Yahoo.Com All e-mails answered promptly.

Sorry for spam catcher address, but personal box is no longer being offered for just that reason. My E-Bay id is ffsta1713SO if you care to check my profile as to honesty. Was having computer problems, no pics available at moment, am working on it. Hope to have that issue resolved by end of weekend. If interested in any items, ask, maybe I can get a pic to you.

"Why not just do what I did, ask the younger people why they are not interested in getting a ham ticket..."

I think the ARRL and the licensed hams need to consider that question too. Most young people don't see ham radio as an up-to-date way of communication. Rather they see the licensing and equipment required as an anachronism. They have numerous highly portable license-free ways of communicating with one another and getting information about the world. Why go through the hassle of getting a license and radio equipment only to find out that the people you work and play with are not on the bands. They don't know what see you on 2 meters means - and when it is explained most of them say but I can do that on a cell phone with lots of people right now.

That's what I thought too. Common sense pictured me a similar image or reality. Just wanted to find out what other people's experience is with it.

Aside from what you just said which is valuable, I want to point out that my communications, I hate to say it, are encrypted. That small GMRS has 15 or so codes and multiplied by the number of channels I can use (from the top of my head from the 12th up since I transmit at "high power" of 4W) makes it unlikely that somebody would instantly tune in. How in the world would I make a fool of myself blubbering that gibberish? There is nothing especially 'secret' about what I talk about. It is all about stocks, like, "sell 500 GOOG right now" or "do you want me to bring you a sandwich?" but I still do not want people with scanners like you hear it. I actually use the telephone line most of the time but need a back up system since once in a while the phones do fail.

How do you go about listening to encrypted conversations, I am curious?

You know I have a full respect for the law but I would hate to be ridiculous.

I would take what he said about call sign usage with a grain of salt. It's no different than somebody telling you it's OK to do 20 over on the highway because they never saw a cop. Yeah you might get away with it for a long time, but sooner or later you'll get nailed. Also consider you're trying to use it for business, that gives the licensed users an extra incentive to report you.

Now for your comment above, if your talking about those so-called "privacy codes", forget it. They don't encrypt anything. What they're for is to keep other radios from opening up the squelch for every transmission on that channel except for the one using that code. That way you don't have to be bothered listening to transmission you're not interested in. Anybody with a scanner can still hear everything you say. One more thing, if you read the rules about station ID it states clearly that you must ID either in English or Mose Code on the GMRS channels. That basically ends any sort of encrypted transmission on GMRS. You may find FRS radios using "voice inversion" scrambling, but then again you have to have all matching radios typically from the same manufacture and most people who are serious monitors have ways to unscramble the signal anyway, either using hardware or some software based technique using a computer sound card. The best rule to observe is assume that somebody can hear you regardless of what kind of transmission you make scrambled, or in the clear.

Regardless, you still cannot use GMRS to conduct business. GMRS is strictly for families and non-business groups. Once you ID with your callsign as required, you open yourself up to being reported.
Nonetheless, I applaud you for getting a license :) That is great :)

Yes. The regs only permit family members to utilize the same

Nope. The other person must apply on their own name and such. They'll

Hello Alexb:

Yeah I wouldn't give the call sign thing too much concern especially with low low power and hand held operation. But I would ID if any one asked. Highly unlikely. And even more unlikely in areas that are not heavily populated.

I don't think the codes your talking about are encrypted your signal. I believe those are digital squelch codes that allow the other radio to open its squelch. So scanner radios will be able to hear the conversation.

I am sure you can talk around the subject that you are framilur with. I buy scanners at yard sales for something different to listen to. And just listen to what ever they have programed in, or what ever crystal channels are in the scanner. We have a local Tow Truck company here that talks around everything. Except when Marge gets hammered on Friday afternoons hehehehehehe.

I haven't a clue how to listen to encrypted signals?!?!?!?!? sorry. Why would you want to? Just a bunch of guys saying Ten-4 and 2180 to headquarters.

Perhaps not so obviously. I've been getting into Hollow state technology recently. Bought a couple olde tube Heathkits and their power supplies at Dayton, and will restore them. I came into Ham radio (radio at all) too late for tube stuff, and frankly, the tube rigs seem very cool to me.

It would seem that you should sell that FT1000 and go strictly tubes if all you do is use it for transmitting. 8^)

I don't find the internet or cell phones to be any competition to

Every student going though the electronics and engineering courses at the college here knows very well what a ham ticket is (the instructor is a ham), and darn well pass any of the exams blindfolded... seldom do they see the need or have the desire when they have tuned the bands and listened...

You think most other colleges are different?

??? I guess your outlook and idea of what Ham radio is is to chat with your buds? In that respect, you are probably correct. If all you want to do is that, you are better served by chat rooms or the telephone. Why on earth anyone with that as their main interest would become a ham is beyond me. Ham radio is not the best hobby for that, although we can do that.

They don't know what see you on 2 meters means - and

A person that gives that sort of answer is never going to be a Ham.

Thanks a lot, much appreciated. I have a ZoneAlarm. It probably guards the ports jealously, I assume.

I will take care of IP address shielding in the coming days since I am getting a static one next week.

Thanks, Do I have to get a second license for the second walkie-talkie that works vis-a-vie of mine?

I am not paranoid about encrypting. There is basically nothing I need to hide. I just do not want to broadcast what I am doing unnecessarily across town. When I talk to people I know I am very open about it. All I want to do is to take MINIMAL precautions with minimal cost involved.

Thanks.

Dunno. Where I am employed, one of the EE courses specifically ends in a Ham ticket being received.

My point is that Internet and cell phones are to Ham radio as fish are

See below. If you go to the thread you can read that this nutcase is still posting from various locations and is apparently proud of what he did.

Arguments on Internet message boards are nothing new, and often are a central component. But in San Diego, California an argument turned deadly on 25 May 2005, resulting in two murders, and two other attempted homicides.

"We've always had a lot of arguments and disputes on this board, but nothing like this, and I really don't think anyone saw it coming," said Radley Pingay, administrator of pirate969.org, in an email response.

"Bruce was always a little hostile, but so many people are like that online, it's hard to tell what's real and what's just shenanigans." Bruce is not only the username of the suspect in the double homicide, but is also his first name.

The online argument started in a thread (link) discussing a local band promoter. Bruce Pastuer, now wanted on two counts of homicide and two counts of assault with a deadly weapon, was one of the participants in the discussion.

Apparently two other board members and Pastuer exchanged insults, at which point Pastuer drove to the home of the two victims at approximately 3:00PM, and shot them both with a borrowed 12 gauge shotgun. The police have not recovered the weapon, and the names of the two victims have not been released pending notification of their relatives.

In the course of the shooting, two neighbors came to investigate, and Pastuer reportedly fired at them as well. His location is unknown, and anyone with information is requested to contact the San Diego Police Department (link).

??? I guess your outlook and idea of what Ham radio is is to chat with your buds? In that respect, you are probably correct. If all you want to do is that, you are better served by chat rooms or the telephone. Why on earth anyone with that as their main interest would become a ham is beyond me. Ham radio is not the best hobby for that, although we can do that.

Yes, hard to tell the ones who are just good at debate and argument and the kooks... usually the kooks will threaten you with death before they attempt it though--beware of death threats! Those making such threats should really be removed and isolated as soon as possible... but, if you give such authority to people--they soon become "over-reactors" and "victimizers" themselves and use such power just to get rid of those who disagree with them-- a very vicious circle...

Hey Peepeeholic:
Yes I am in Toledo. I have plenty of down home hospitality for you or ANY of the other queens in here who wish to stir up some mess.
You wanna come by and visit? I will be delighted to send you back to the MISTAKE ON THE LAKE with a thought in your mind that it was a real dumb idea.
Imagine, Peepeeholic...Imagine...You come to my place and star some junk...I put you face down and hurtin extreme, take pics of you laying there with a bumped up noggin, and post 'em to the NG. I relish you coming by. I am good in the callbook, just as I told your wife, the trainedpuppet.
Have not had this much fun since I used to go cuttin' coax and building jamming oscillators back when I was 16 yrs old.

CW as a requirement for access to HF was dropped as at 01 Jan 2004. There has not been the expected massive increase in amateur licences - I think that VK currently has around 10,000 licenced amateurs (plus or minus a few) - with numbers pretty stagnant/decreasing slightly. I feel that there has been enough time for the expected increase to be visible, but this has yet to occur - maybe the majority of those with an interest in radios already have their licences, or lost interest in the subject - who knows. Onto another part of the thread - age. Most amateurs are older - when I took out my licence aged 23, I was one of the youngest around - going to the first club meeting, I was somewhat dismayed to see that I was the youngest by at least ten years, but at least I had lots of experience to learn from. Nowdays (ten years later), I am seeing young people getting into the hobby, but not in the numbers that I would like to see, nor in the numbers that we need to have a healthy population. Buggered if I know what to do, but the new foundation licence that is due to come in (not sure when as the date seems to continue slipping right) has great promise to at least increase numbers.

Try unpluging the AC cord from the broadcast radio from the wall and turn it around, if it's not polorized. If it is, get an adapter and give it a try.
Then ground that radio

OK, what is the solution for me that won't run afoul with the law? Would a CB radio be the one? What type of radios can I use for a two way communications, conducted occasionally with high degree of reliability on demand? As I mentioned, The two points are five blocks apart downtown a Midwestern city with a lot of structures in between. The conversations will (or rather, may) be done during business hours between 9:00 and 4:00 EST. I want to make sure that when I turned that radio on: (1) I can contact my partner immediately (2) in any weather (3) there is minimal interference. As I mentioned, it is a back up system for me. I am using VoIP phone lines most of the time but my office on the other end of the communication line has to have at least one line landbased. In any event, on a few occasions because of construction nearby the lines have been interrupted recently. I need a backup to fall onto in case of future problems.

Thanks

I don't think a year is really long enough to tell. In addition, is the word getting out to prospective hams? Did the decrease in numbers come from lack of interest on the part of prospective hams or the failure to find prospective hams? Changes in licensing will have no noticeable impact when people don't even know that ham radio exists or barely know it exists but have no idea what it is all about.

If you are into RACES/ARES or the like, then Ham radio is very useful. What happens when the cell towers, twisted pair & trunked radio systems are overloaded or damaged in a disaster? That is where ham radio can shine. Also it may not be "high tech", but when you build you own Yagi or cubical quad antenna & know that you have to think a little bit to make communication in a certain country (what band to use to make the hop) takes some thought vs. cell phone & internet which takes very little thought. with all of their inherent limitations. But the internet provides a range of communication that is unmatched by any other method of communication, including 13 channels of VHF, a smattering of channels on UHF on TV and rotary dial phones.

> Why go through the hassle of getting a license and radio

"??? I guess your outlook and idea of what Ham radio is is to chat with your buds? In that respect, you are probably correct. If all you want to do is that, you are better served by chat rooms or the telephone. Why on earth anyone with that as their main interest would become a ham is beyond me. Ham radio is not the best hobby for that, although we can do that. "

JS> Communication is what amateur radio is about...people talking with one another usually about everyday things or as you say "chatting with their buds". And it is about the camraderie of people enjoying and talking about their equipment. And how could we forget band congesting contesting - how many people one can have a 5 word conversation with over a set period of time. The hobby isn't about providing useful emergency communications however. The last time I heard a hurricane net it descended into chaos with hams trampling over one another trying to be the first to contact someone in the emergency area. Hams have not "saved the day" other than in their dreams for a long long time.

If ham radio is about something else, please inform me as well as the potential hams who see amateur radio as little more than an expensive and self-limiting way of talking to one another. Or said another way if you stripped the communications aspect from the hobby what would be left. And how many people would queue up for licenses?

Hams take a cavalier attitude when it comes to explaining the value of ham radio, they end up driving the young new entrants away. They find it difficult to consider new ways that might attract new blood into the hobby. Hams have to be able to explain what the benefits of being a ham are. Unfortunately most adopt a bunker mentality that goes like this: "The requirements are what they are because I had to take them long long ago. Yes morse code is important, but I really can't tell you why. If you have to ask what the benefits of being a ham are, then there is a good chance you won't enjoy being a ham. Please consider another hobby."

See the forum on GMRS..... It is entirely possible I was wrong before.... your assessment of the regs may have been correct. A business cannot license itdelf.... BUT if each individual IN the business licenses, THEN it may be legal. Discussion in the other forum may clear this up..... If I was wrong... I apologize for the error.

As for VOIP..... That has created extreme controversy in the GMRS community. We are waiting for an FCC ruling on theis. It appears it may be totally illegal, since rules forbid any GMRS traffic being transmitted over phone lines.

CB is NOT the way to go for business comms. Handheld radios are bulky, other users are rude.

The license free Family Radio Service (FRS), The Multi Use Radio Service (MURS), or the business radio service can be used. MURS and BRS both have expensive equipment costs. FRS is similar to GMRS, except you can only use handhelds with a 500 mW power limit.

Regardless.... since you are now on GMRS Web, you can get your questions

Personally, I'd recommend the new(er) MURS band. This is license free, and is definitely capable of going 5 blocks. Of course, blocks are different lengths in different locations, but either way, I wouldn't think that you would run into any problems.

MURS consists of 5 frequencies (channels) that were once used for licensed business communications, but are now available for public (and business) use, license free. There are three frequencies in the 151.XXX MHz range, and two in the 154.XXX MHz range. If you were to utilize one of the 151.XXX MHz freqs., you would minimize your chance of interference, as the most readily used freqs. were the 154.XXX MHz ones. This band can also utilize CTCSS tone codes to further minimize interference.

Another plus is that there are LOTS of high quality radios on the used market that utilize these frequencies because of the fact that they used to be licensed business band freqs. Do a little internet searching for MURS, I bet it will fit what you are looking for, and be a LOT cheaper to boot if you go with used equipment...

Yeah . . I have a stock late S/N meatball S3B I just might juice up one thing but once you get on top of it it really cooks.

Ouch: How do you spell clueless? I loves you dearly Michael, you're a very nice guy and yer heart is in the right place but you have this frustrating penchant for getting over yer head at warp speed when discussions turn to even moderately deep-end techie sorts of topics.
You done it again.

This guy is obviously into low-band weak signal dxing on 160/80/40 etc.
Those of us take this game seriously understand what it takes in the way of rcvr performance. He's talking about using his modded R4-C as an outboard RX because of it's legendary front end performance, it's blocking dynamic range and it's third order intercept points as they relate to successfully dealing with very difficult band conditions.
Which leaves out your Heath treasures and all members of the FT-1000 clan in this particular pursuit.

"If the tube stuff is better, then I'd go for it in a minute" eh? Welp

Yes, grab a cb and a BIG "Leen-e-air" (you'll be stuck with a 5-watt walkie talkie if on foot <frown>) and join the rest of them!!!! Go freeband (just above cb freqs, or just below if you need less populated chans--couse, you will find a lot of mexicans on these freqs.)

Really too bad you are not a ham--then you could use your 10 meter equip (like a notable number of hams do) on 11 meters--those multi-kilowatt "leen-e-airs" some of the hams bootleg with are the real key!!!

OK, what is the solution for me that won't run afoul with the law? Would a CB radio be the one? What type of radios can I use for a two way communications, conducted occasionally with high degree of reliability on demand? As I mentioned, The two points are five blocks apart downtown a Midwestern city with a lot of structures in between. The conversations will (or rather, may) be done during business hours between 9:00 and 4:00 EST. I want to make sure that when I turned that radio on: (1) I can contact my partner immediately (2) in any weather (3) there is minimal interference. As I mentioned, it is a back up system for me. I am using VoIP phone lines most of the time but my office on the other end of the communication line has to have at least one line landbased. In any event, on a few occasions because of construction nearby the lines have been interrupted recently. I need a backup to fall onto in case of future problems.

To learn the technical TRUTH about CB Radio without all the hype from people who are just plain ignorant, check out the following books from CBC International. They're selling right now at a big discounts on our EBAY & AMAZON stores too.

Check it out!

To see exactly what these books look like, plus all the specific, chapter-by-chapter details, see our Web at:

www.cbcintl.com

Some of the books included are:

BOOK #1: THE "SCREWDRIVER EXPERT'S" GUIDE To Peaking Out & Repairing CB Radios. List $25. The most popular "big dummy's" guide ever published on do-it-yourself CB repairs & modifications. Covers peaking of receivers, transmitters, modulation, mike problems, antenna & SWR problems, detailed frequency modifications for both crystal & PLL radios. Loaded with charts, illustrations, and specific instructions for most brands including the new export models. This latest edition also covers slider and broadbanding tricks, FM conversions, and much more!

BOOK #2: THE CB PLL DATA BOOK. List $20. The only complete reference source on CB PLL synthesizer circuits ever published! Detailed PLL theory explained in layman's terms. How they work, and how to modify them for many more channels. Includes specific PLL block mixing diagrams, truth charts, & IC pin function diagrams for nearly every PLL chip ever used. Covers all the most popular U.S. & export chassis, with specific listings of all models using the chip.

BOOK #3: UNDERSTANDING & REPAIRING CB RADIOS. List $42. Giant 370-page technical book for the professional repairman. Picks up where the "SCREWDRIVER EXPERT'S" GUIDE leaves off. Includes circuit descriptions & troubleshooting guide for 23- & 40-Ch., crystal & PLL, solid-state & tube, AM, FM, SSB, CW, American & export models. Covers test equipment (& where to find it), transistor basics, synthesizers, receivers, transmitters, power supplies, T/R switching, antennas, interference, parts & accessory sources. Over 350 illustrations including schematics, charts, and photos. Huge subject index also lets you look up repairs by symptoms. This is "must" reading for any serious CB technician!

Try MURS, a Part 95 VHF radio service. It allows 2 watts, gain antennas, and VHF works better in the simplex mode then UHF. The allowed freqs are:

151.820
151.880
151.940
154.570
154.600

The last 2 are used by fast food drive thru's but are wider bandwidth frequencies allowing more equipment to be compatable.

More info can be found at http://www.provide.net/~prsg/
just don't believe all Stewart's BS.

Oh yeah, don't use freqs in VHF that you aren't allowed.
There is no room to play around in that range. There are public service freqs above and below these freqs.

Anybody seen this problem. Any help would be greatly appreciated.

3812. controlling marine radio remotely via VoIP?

Hello,
I'm a member of a volunteer marine rescue group in Australia.
I was chatting yesterday to a couple of members about the possibilities of accessing our radio base's radios from home, via the internet.

The idea would be to have a virtual radio on the computer, transmitting and receiving via the radios at the base. We'd have to make it secure of course, and like the US we would have certain local regulations we have to adhere to.

Anyway I thought I might ask online and see if anyone could help. I've read a little on the echolink product and I don't think it's what we're after, though I have to admit that alot of the terminology used is beyond me (for now anyway).

So my questions
1) Is there an internet-based method of separating the physical transmitter/receiver from the user (who needs his computer, mic, and method to switch channels, adjust squelch etc)?
2) Are there software only and hardware based solutions?
3) what kind of costs are we looking at (besides the internet/pc cost)?

Thanks for any and all information and help!
Greg
ps. If this is the wrong group to ask on, please point me in the right direction?

Just looking for the elements and such.

Do not need the Boom, Hubs, Boom to Mast Plate, or the Gamma Matches that break all the time. I have new billet aluminum hubs made to fit a stronger 2 inch boom, and a better boom to mast plate. And the Fiber glass rod truss will be replaced with a better nylon rope multiple truss system. And the matching system will upgraded to a lower loss matching system.

The last moonraker I got, had almost all the hubs broke!

I am rebuilding a Moonraker 6 for a friend. Will have a much stronger Boom and Hubs. Since these old moonraker beams worked so well the guy wants it bullet proofed! Since you will need a tower and a heavy duty rotor why add a little weight and make it last another 40 years or more. I should have photos if I can find the elements to save some money.

Whoops, very interesting!

Personally, in fact, I do not have the know-how and inclination to transmit outside of what my purchased device would do and I have no need to do it. The channels I tried are pretty empty most of the time. Of course, the issue of the distance is a different story, but still I doubt I would go out on the lam with another category in a different frequency range. Still it is kind of interesting to know. Thanks a lot. Very valuable stuff. It will get stuck in my database forever.

A pretty dramatic world you are living in guys. I feel now I've got enough of basic knowledge. What I really need it to pick up some slang:)

Thanks,

My IQ is 143 and my parents were legally married at the date of my conception. Wrong again.

You have now brought down the AKC on your false Christian self. Watch and learn, wristflipper.

Wrong, wristflipper. I was there. You were just too stupid to realize it. By the way, I never sell at Dayton. Boy are you dumb. Since you threatened what you were gonna do to AKC, etc at Dayton, why didnt you say where you would be? We know why, coward. You didnt camp there cuz you were afraid of what might happen. Thats how much of a wristflipping paranoid turdbag you are.

Seeya at Woodward, sissy.

LOL!!!, it is an acquired type of taste isn't it. Man, it's a great day! 77 degree's, wife & kids playing the hotub, slow smoking a prime rib, sitting next to a keg of Gordon Birsch Marzen, working the new wireless network, pretty cool.

Hello Chuck:

Is not a problem GI.

I saw your smilly face no biggie.

The Moonrakers worked really well. Just got a guy who wants all the good stuff to upgrade it. But then I have to drive over to Vagas to install it.

Take care and God Bless.

Hello I am new to the world of CB/Ham radio

I have not even invested in a radio yet questions

Should I buy secondhand if so from where is the best place?

Is Ebay.com really a good idea?

Could you tell me is AM or FM the legal freq in the UK and Ireland and if so which most active used nowadays?

Whats the best kit to buy what President Lincoln Radio by Uniden like?

What are these www.chipswitch.com ?
Mobile Cbs versus Handheld Cb versus Basestation?????
So many questions oh well just learning.

While the current administration would like to make out that the "economy is strong", there seems to be mounting evidence that it is harder for people to increase there economic situation, move up the ladder of success, etc. Immigrants who used to only take 3 generations to get from where they are to the mainstream middle class are now expected to take six generations to do it, if at all. The country is, reportedly, becoming less of a meritocracy, where people move up based on their ability, and more of a "caste system" where people are born to an economic level, and move up only with great diffuculty.

See:

http://www.csmonitor.com/2005/0523/p17s01-cogn.html

This is probably at work for holding back a lot of potential amateurs. You don't go spending the money you might once have spent on a radio if you're 30 yrs old and a technical geek - you now spend it on the rent.

Prosperity is becoming more of a rare thing, with really staggaring numbers of jobs being shipped overseas because their workers will build a software program at a pay of $30K per year, compared with a worker here that gets $80K per year. The general "think" on this by the American public seems to be that the $80K SW engineer here is just too greedy, and deserves to be out of a job in preference to the $30K a year Indian or Russian or whoever. IOW, grassroots opinion is supporting the outsourcing.

So this is probably the basis for how this hobby, and a lot of other hobbies requiring the spending of significant cash, is going to fail - not for lack of personal interest or ability, but from an economic lack of ability to reasonably pursue the hobby. Yeah, we've always sat around and wanted a bigger tower like Chief Brody wanted a bigger boat - but the basic stuff of ham radio, a decent transciever, is likely harder for the newer hams than it used to be for us. Heck, we had Heathkit! Now, people either don't have good jobs, or their present jobs are so uncertain that they won't spend the money and go in debt for the radio or tower or whatever.

So, welcome to the 21st Century.

What to do about it? The income tax is largely at work here. Corporate taxes make producing things here more expensive. Companies ship their jobs overseas where the aren't taxed so much - if India were to tax a worker there 50%, and take that $30K a year SW engineer down to $15K, is that more or less expensive overall than using the Stateside SW engineer at a 28% rate for that level of salary. 28% of $80K is $22,400. So, that's _more_ $$$ down the drain for taxes here than a 50% tax overseas would be.

Get rid of the income tax, and espcially the corporate income tax, and replace it with a sales tax, and all of a sudden that cheap accounting software package from India that used to cost $200 now costs maybe $260. In the meanwhile, the equivalent product built here, for $250 or so, first has its price go down from the USA-based company not having to pay income tax, and then add the sales tax percentage, and you get a _much_ more competitive USA-built piece of software.

Hooray! Its what we need now... I mean _NOW_.

>I will leave the speculation and 'hard data' gathering processes to

Well, there's nothing wrong with repeaters, handi-talkies, and newbies. We need the newbies, and having lotsa repeaters is a _good_ thing.

This is 2nd hand from a local ham telling the story of an emergency exercise involving FEMA and a communications network over a local repeater. Everything was going outstandingly when the FEMA guy thought he'd throw a monkey wrench into the works. He went over to the net control guy and told him to simulate the repeater going down. Net control just called the guy with the biggest home signal and told him to tell everybody to go to another local repeater, and the net was back on the air pretty much without skipping a beat. The FEMA fellow said, "How'd you _do_ that?" NC just smiled and said, "Hey, we have backups!"

Hello Sandra

There are a number of answers. Might I ask you to check out this URL:
http://groups.yahoo.com/group/HamRadioHelpGroup

The gang will try and answer you truthfully. I suspect there are no folks that will flame you, but if someone tries I can guarantee you the will be gone. Forever.

The answer is not totally straightforward, but I will try and answer and so will many others. Please check the group out. We welcome CBers, scanner enthusiasts, and others. We do try and present honest, balanced answers.
It is not a flame group.

BTW, we have members from many countries and that is why we can supply many answers. None of us knows all of the facts, but between the group, we usually can come up with the pertinent data.

Best regards from Rochester, NY
Jim

CB and ham are two different worlds, but you don't really have to choose just one. I'm a ham, but I've recently taken an interest in CB.

You can probably get into CB a little more easily and cheaply than ham radio. I guess you're in UK? Here in US, there is no license required for CB, and getting on the ham bands requires a somewhat lengthy licensing process. CB equipment is generally more affordable than ham, and the service is rather limited by its relatively high frequency, antenna restrictions, and the fact that most stations are now mobile (our truckers).

Here is a neat page with a lot of frequency information for various countries:
http://www.thiecom.de/cbforum.htm

Secondhand radios are usually a great place to start, and eBay is (and I hate saying this) a good place to get them. However, remember that if you buy internationally, you may get a radio that won't work on the legal frequencies in your area. Check which countries are compatible. Most new digital gear can be easily reprogrammed for regional differences.

According to a CB proprietor here who sold me my ham antenna mounting hardware, the top choice for CB in USA is Connex. They call it an "export radio," which I assume means it's made for other countries. Well, that and that it runs at ridiculously higher powers than are permitted by the FCC in this country. Uniden is the old favorite, but my dealer was not happy with the quality of their newer models.

Chipswitch is a modification that allows you to use a Uniden 10m ham rig on CB frequencies. It also adds memories and split operation, which for some reason the original radio didn't have.

Finally, I'd recommend getting a mobile rig, as base stations are typically just larger versions of mobiles with better speakers. You will have something you can use at home or on the road. A cheap 13.8V power supply will allow you to run it at home. Most ham equipment operates on DC, btw, so just about every amateur has a gigantic 13.8V supply under his or her desk anyway.

The above is not so much the case with ham gear, though. Most amateur mobiles have the same features as base stations, but they cram many features into a very few controls. They also tend to have reduced sensitivity when compared to base rigs, probably because cars are very noisy and have tiny antennas anyway. I've been using portable/mobile ham rigs all along, mostly because I can't afford a base station.

Hope this helps!

This is the wrong group. This is a CB radio group. No marine or VOIP

No one ever said otherwise. In fact, you can add South America, China, Malaysia, Singapore, Chad, Sudan, Phillipines, Central America, France, Russia, Ireland, N Korea, to your revelation, but what you are unable, is establish or cite a link between Iraq and 911.
For that, you need look to BL, Afghanistan, and yes, Saudi Arabia..

Well, Bush swore on national tv in front of the entire country BL was responsible for 911 and he was our number one priority and that he would not rest until he was captured and that he would spare no expense to captre him and would hunt him down to the "four corners" of the earth if necessary. Approximately a year later, Bush flip-flopped, claiming he no longer cared about BL and even said he was no longer a priority. So, you -have- been "assured" by Bush, but as he illustrates, it was lipservice and menat absolutely nothing.

Leland is confused. Contrary to what he claimed, sooner or later people do NOT get nailed for such actions. Listen to the cb, channel 6 or any other channel where dx is rampant. A quick peep into the records of the FCC busts reveals the way things really are. Leland likes to cite the exception and -not-the norm of how the feds operate. Even if you were to get the attention of the feds and get "nailed", you must be served with a warning notice alerting you to the violation and an order to cease the illegal activity, as Leland's examples cite. In fact, most cited are guilty of repeat offenses after receiving multiple warnings. The chances of getting busted are slim to slimmer unless someone complains. Even then, the feds must actually witness any violation before any action other than a warning notice is issued.

You do not understand. Everything you said is formally correct. On a practical level a great degree of tolerance exists in such matters. I got it even before I posted here.

The issue for me was to learn the amplitude of trouble a person can get in, potentially, under extreme circumstances. The license costs just $80.00 which is next to nothing for me. It is much better for me to pay 80 bucks and forget about the matter otherwise in some extreme circumstances somebody, not necessarily the Feds, can point their finger at me and say:
BTW, he operates a RADIO TRANSMITTER without a license or in some illegal way.

This is the point.

How to get a BIG, russian made (made like a dern battleship!), Linear--cheap!...

1) Go to the shipping port closest to you.
2) Find a Russian crewman who can speak english.
4) Negotiate with him.
5)
a) either have him bring a linear back to port next sail.
b) have him put you in contact with a russian company.
6) Pick up you linear and have at it.

... if you wish to purchase a linear from another country--simply choose the appropriate ship at the port...
Don't be afraid to modify the above steps to suit your purpose(s)....

I won't even mention what can be done at a private airport...

Huh? I got on the FCC's ULS site, got an FRN, went to arrl.org, found a test session, took my test and passed it.

It took one week from thought to license.

Of course, after 25 years in CB radios, scanning, SWL and such with an electronics background, it was a no-brainer. It took no studying!
